Chapter I

A. The Story

Read this short version of the chapter. There are 3 things which didn't really happen. Find them.

One night while Dr. Watson was visiting Sherlock Holmes, a strange man came in with a problem. The man turned out to be the King of Scandinavia, and he said that he was getting married soon. The problem was that Irene Adler, a woman he previously had a close relationship with, had a photograph of them together, and the King was worried that she might try to blackmail him. The King wanted Sherlock to see if he could get the photo back from Ms Adler. Sherlock disguised himself as a doctor and went to the her house. He tried to get the photograph, but was unable to do so, though he did witness Irene getting married to another man. When Sherlock, Dr. Watson and the King went back to her house to try one more time, they found that Irene had left for a walk, but she had left a letter for Sherlock. Inside the letter was the photograph and a message saying that she knew it was Sherlock in disguise. The King was happy to have the photograph back, and Irene was now happily married, but Sherlock was beaten by a woman's wit.

A. The Story

Read this short version of the chapter. There are 3 things which didn't really happen. Find them.

Sherlock Holmes and Dr Watson went to Bristol to investigate the murder of a man named Charles McCarthy. Mr McCarthy had gone for a walk alone, but his son James was seen going in the same direction a little later. Not long after, James was seen arguing with his father then running and screaming away from the woods because he found his father dead. James was arrested because his knife was found near the body. After Sherlock and Watson got to their hotel, a woman came to say that James did not murder his father. She was the daughter of Mr John Turner, who owned the land where Charles and James lived, and she was a very close friend of James. Sherlock then talked to James and later to John Turner. From these talks, Sherlock discovered that Mr Turner used to be a diamond thief in Australia and had met Mr McCarthy there many years before. Mr McCarthy was now blackmailing Mr Turner and living on his best land and trying to arrange a marriage between his son James and Mr Turner's daughter. Mr Turner did not agree to this and decided to murder Mr McCarthy in the woods. James was later set free, but Mr Turner did not go to prison because he was quite old and died shortly after Sherlock solved the mystery.

The Story

Read this short version of the chapter. There are 3 things which didn't really happen. Find them.

One day after Christmas while Dr Watson was visiting Sherlock Holmes, Peterson came to them with a precious blue stone that he had found inside a goose. The goose had been dropped by a woman on the street, and since the woman ran away, Peterson kept the goose and decided to cook it. The stone turned out to be stolen from the Countess of Morcar, who was staying at the Hotel Cosmopolitan, and the robbery was blamed on a cleaner named John Horner. After putting an advertisement in the paper to try and find the owner of the goose, Sherlock and Watson went to the place where the geese were sold. There they met James Ryder, who was also looking for the goose and who was the head attendant at the Hotel Cosmopolitan. After inviting Mr Ryder back to Baker Street, they discovered that he had stolen the precious stone and had tried to hide it in a goose he got as a Christmas present from his mother. Chapter 7

A. The Story

Read this short version of the chapter. There are 3 things which didn't really happen. Find them.

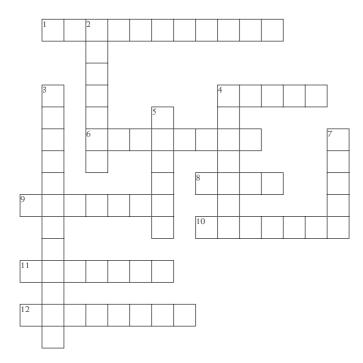

Early one morning, a man named Victor Hatherley came to see Dr Watson. He was in a state of shock as his thumb had been cut off the night before. After cleaning the wound, Watson took the man to see Sherlock. The man was a hydraulic engineer and was recently employed by a strange thin man with a Polish accent to come out to his house in the country and fix a hydraulic press that he said was used to make metal parts for houses. When Hatherley inspected the machine, he discovered that they were using it for illegal purposes. When he mentioned this, the strange man tried to kill him by locking him in the press, but Hatherley escaped from the room. As he was trying to get out of the house through a window, the other man cut off his thumb with an axe. He passed out shortly after this, but woke up later at the train station. Hatherley immediately went back to London and told Watson and Sherlock what had happened. Unfortunately, when the got the police and went back to the house, they discovered that the house was on fire and the criminals had escaped.

I may have something interesting in a minute, for I have a new client, unless I am very much mistaken.

Just as these words were spoken, Miss Mary Sutherland was brought in.

Then she married Mr Windibank, a man 15 years younger then herself.

Mr Windibank didn't want to take part in any of these and didn't want his wife or stepdaughter to attend either.

As Mr Windibank was away at the time, Miss Sutherland's mother gave her approval.

This was last Friday, Mr Holmes, and I haven't heard a word from him since then.

Looking at the letters he noticed that even the signature of Hosmer was type-written.

Who was he then, and what did he want with Miss Sutherland?

And I have every reason to believe that I will succeed in discovering this mystery.

Unfortunately Miss Sutherland turned out to be an affectionate person and wanted the marriage, which would spoil the whole plan.

While Peterson was coming home on Christmas morning, he saw a man whose hat had been knocked off his head.

So Peterson became the owner of the Christmas goose, and Sherlock the owner of the old hat.

While I was listening to this adventure, Peterson himself arrived at Baker street.

Peterson stretched out his hand revealing a brilliantly shining blue stone.

Not only it is a precious stone, it is the blue carbuncle that has been stolen recently from the Countess of Morcar.

It wasn't until Sherlock used his old trick by bribing a pound that he told us everything we needed to know.

We were just about to leave for the farm when we heard a salesman shouting at a trembling figure of a man standing in front of him.

Right after Horner had left, Ryder came in to take the stone and to raise the alarm that the room had been burgled.

One day, when Ryder was visiting his sister, she offered him a bird as a Christmas present.

Ryder's happiness at collecting the goose soon disappeared when he discovered that the goose had no stone inside.
