FOREWORD

The desire to write poetry, or at least acceptable verse, is almost universal. The achievement of this desire may be gained by anyone, without excessive effort. Almost everyone, at some stage of his or her life, has yielded to the seductive siren, and has done his or her best to write poetry. An adequate craftbook on versification is a necessity, when the urge becomes unconquerable.

When the versifier's problem is narrowed down to rhyme, the need for a convenient and logically arranged rhyming dictionary soon becomes self-evident. Rhyme is exclusively a matter of sound: what the scientists call phonetics. The logically arranged rhyming dictionary must be arranged scientifically by sound; arranged phonetically, to use the scientific word. The arrangement of rhyming sounds in the present volume is wholly phonetic.

The introductory study of versification is so complete, that the book will answer almost every question on technique that any would-be poet or versifier desires to have answered. Moreover, it provides models for the most intricate forms of poetry and versification that English-speaking poets use. Following a model is at best finger exercise. But finger exercise must precede mastery of the keyboard.

The phonetic devices in the volume are simplified from the leading standard dictionaries, by eliminating in general all phonetic signs except those placed above the accented or rhyming syllable. Once these simple phonetic devices are understood and absorbed, poets and versifiers will begin to think accurately, scientifically and phonetically about rhymes and rhyming. The technique of rhyming will become as automatic as the technique of walking: and the poetic energy will be proportionately released for the more effective creation of poetry.

POETRY AND VERSIFICATION

Poetry and Verse

THE WORD POETRY is often used loosely to mean whatever embodies the products of imagination and fancy, the finer emotions and the sense of ideal beauty. In this lax usage, men speak of "the poetry of motion," the poetry of Rodin or Wagner, the poetry of dahlia-raising. In accurate usage, poetry is a specific fine art, defined as follows:

Poetry is the expression of thoughts which awake the higher and nobler emotions or their opposites, in words arranged according to some accepted convention.

This definition includes, for instance, Oriental forms of poetry, where the sole convention is the number of syllables to the line. Limiting it to usual Occidental poetry the following definition applies:

Occidental poetry, in its usual form, is the expression of thoughts which awake the higher and nobler emotions or their opposites, in words whose rhythm tends toward uniformity or regularity, rather than toward variety.

Both prose and poetry have rhythm. But the rhythm of prose tends toward variety; and that of poetry toward regularity. There is no definite dividing line; each poet, each reader and appreciator of poetry, must arrive at his or her own dividing line. To some, the borderline of poetry includes only the strict regularity of Pope or Dryden, or—

Baby in the caldron fell,—
See the grief on mother's brow!
Mother loved her darling well.
Darling's quite hard-boiled by now.
Baby, Harry Graham.

No one can quarrel with this, if it is an honest boundary. To others, the magnificent wilder rhythms of Walt Whitman and Lincoln's Gettysburg Address are definitely poetry. No one can quarrel with this either.

The test as to subject matter is subjective: does the alleged poem awake in the reader the higher and nobler emotions or their opposites? Each reader, appreciator or poet is final arbiter in this test, as in the test of technique. The expression of thoughts which fail to register emotionally with a reader as poetry is called verse. Thus, divided by technique, there are the two classifications, poetry and prose; divided by subject matter and its emotional effect, there are the two classifications, poetry and verse.

Poetry in Human Affairs

Poetry preceded prose, as a persisting form of literary expression. Writing was unknown to early man; and poetry was far better adapted to be retained in the mind than its more plodding relative, prose. The conventions of poetry formed memory devices which prose lacked. In the beginning, lyric cries, folk wisdom, tales of tribal heroes, formal odes of jubilation or lamentation, religious teachings, philosophies, pseudo-sciences, histories of men, demigods, gods and peoples, developed first in the form of poetry.

Insofar as the conventions of poetry were artificial and unnatural, poetry tended constantly to rigidify and petrify. It became artificial and unnatural, whereas prose continued to be natural. Man learned to write, and to preserve his writing in stone, papyrus, sheepskin and paper. At first it was the poetry which was so preserved; at length the art patterns were broken, and humbler and more natural prose began to replace poetry. Today, we look to prose for folk wisdom, actual and fictional narratives, religious teachings, philosophies, scientific writings, and histories. Poetry, as the most concentrated and emotional expression of the soul of man, still should have its place in the lyric outbursts, the songs, of man. But poets, bound by fossilized conventions, have become a tepid social group, their words largely unimportant; and in the large prose tends today to have replaced poetry entirely. Many of the poets today and tomorrow seek to restore poetry to something of its original wide popularity, as a natural and unartificial expression of concentrated emotional speech.

Kings, rulers, statesmen, generals, philosophers, scientists were once of necessity poets: it was their sole socially acceptable form of expression. This is no longer. Poets were once doers; they are now at best sayers, increasingly unheard. This is one price of man's extreme specialization. The price paid may be more than the human gain, in this particular.

The Poet's Equipment

The poet, like all artists, is one of the race's sensitives: one of those more finely attuned to phrase the past and the present acceptably, and sense and phrase the future. The first necessary equipment is sincerity. This demands that commonplace phrasings must be avoided, in favor of fresh original expression of individual or group concentrated emotions. If the race recognizes these as its own, to that extent the poet will be hailed as poetically great.

Another essential is technical mastery; adeptness in the craft of poetry, skill in handling all the tools of the trade. Familiarity with all the conventions will enable you to break them and make new ones when your fresh subject matter demands it. Technical mastery is as easy, and no easier, than learning how to raise better peas than your neighbor, or how to build better bridges and skyscrapers than anyone else. Having learned the craft, anyone with an ear for word-music can improvise flawless heroic blank verse or any other form of blank verse by the hour, or improvise elaborately rhymed sonnets with no appreciable hesitation. This is not poetry. But the familiarity with the craft makes the coming of poetry easier, in the rare hours when the poet has a concentrated word that must be said.

Poetic Greatness

One can become great poetically, either in his own sight alone or in the opinions of others, without knowledge of the craft. Homer, Sappho, Villon, Burns, made their own patterns, or poured their burning emotional beauty into ready-made patterns followed without being comprehended. The definitions of patterns were made afterward, from a scholastic study of poetry widely recognized as great. Such greatness may be achieved by anyone today—the entirely satisfactory expression of one's soul's yearnings. But the recognition of such greatness today will ordinarily be limited to the poet and his immediate circle of admirers within or without his family.

With a complete technical mastery of the craft of poetry, any poet today can achieve complete greatness in his own sight. Whether he is hailed by others as great, and especially whether or not his name is hailed by his own and subsequent generations as great, depends largely on the extent to which his own concentrated heart-utterances express the desires of the race, in a new, fresh and original form. Given such recognition by the race, an enduring poetic greatness has been achieved. The poet can no more control this than Cnut could act as dictator over the tide.

How Poems Come

Verse upon any theme, and in treatment ranging from the most ponderously serious to the most frivolously flippant, can be manufactured at any time. Its technique is comparatively simple. Its devices, meter, rhyme, alliteration, assonance, consonance, stanza arrangement may be mastered as easily as multiplication tables.

Poetry comes differently. It is primarily the intellect that manufactures verse; but the intellect plays only a secondary part in creating poetry. The desire that seeks expression, which it finds in the poem, springs from a deeper basic source than thinking. Man, indeed all forms of life, are compact of desires. The fulfillment of one desire causes others to spring hydra-like from its invisible corpse. Psychologists tell us that dreams are likewise expressions of desire, in the form of desires fulfilled; that is, wish fulfillments. Much thinking is likewise wish fulfillment; there is truth in Wordsworth's dictum, "The wish is father to the thought." There must be, also, an obstacle to the immediate fulfillment of the wish; otherwise the poet would proceed to achieve his wish and have no need for a poem to express it. As one poet has it:

Singing is sweet; but be sure of this,
Lips only sing when they cannot kiss.

Because of the obstacle, a tremendous inner compulsion comes upon the sensitive poet to seek relief by creating his wish-fulfillment in words: and so it is that poems are born. This inner compulsion has, as one of its names, inspiration. Inspiration blows from no outer sky, but from the universe of desires within. The woman's insistent inner compulsion to deliver her child at the appointed hour is hardly more shatteringly imperative than the true poet's insistent inner commandment to write.

At times the whole poem forms itself within the mind, before the first word is written down. At times a couplet, a single line—perhaps the first, but more often the last—or even a phrase or a mood comes first, with the dominant insistence that it be given the intermittent immortality of writing. The wise procedure for the poet is to write down what comes, as it comes, even if only a single line or less is the result. As far as possible, write out the poem without delay, to prevent another visitor from Porlock's silencing part of your poem forever, as Coleridge's Kubla Khan was silenced forever.

When the poem or poetic fragment is written down, the critical intellect comes into play. If technical mastery has become habitual, the intellect may have no changes to suggest. The poet who fails to be a critic as well is usually his own self-slayer. More extended poems, of course, require more preparation and slower writing and criticism. In all cases the danger is more in the overuse of the intellect than in the use of inspiration.

Originality in Poetry

The easiest way, in poetry, is to rephrase your own emotional reactions in the words and phrases created by the favorite poets of the past: so that a thing is "white as the driven snow," or "red as a June rose." When these similes were first invented, they were creations; their repetition, unless in slightly altered form, is plagiarism or borrowing. Second-rate poets distrust their own vision, which differs in every case from that of every other person in the world; and hence sag into such uncreative repetitions. It is wisest to be true to your own differing vision and seek to expand the boundaries of poetry by stating your own desires in your own terms.

The weakness of much verse and some poetry of the past is partly traceable to unoriginal teachers of English or versification, who advised their pupils to saturate themselves in this or that poet, and then write. Keats, saturated in Spenser, took a long time to overcome this echoey quality and emerge into the glorious highland of his Hyperrion. Many lesser souls never emerge. It is valuable to know the poetry of the past and love it. But the critical brain should carefully root out every echo, every imitation—unless some alteration in phrasing or meaning makes the altered phrase your own creation.

The present double decade has splendidly altered the technique of versification in poetry, by the addition of freer rhythms, consonance, and other devices in the direction of natural speech. It has altered the themes and subjects of poetry as much, until the Verboten sign is unknown to the present generations of poets, as far as themes are concerned. If the speech is natural and conversational; the treatment sincere and original; the craftsmanship matured—there is no reason in the poet's effort to withhold him from a seat among the immortals.

■ II ■

THE TECHNIQUE OF VERSIFICATION: RHYTHM

Accent and Rhythm

RHYTHM IS THE emphasis structure of successive sounds. It is easy to understand and not easy to define. In prose and poetry it means the flow of accented and unaccented syllables. It may be defined as:

The successive rise and fall of sounds, in pitch, stress, or speed; when used of words, depending on accents, pauses, or durational quantities.

In classical Greek and Latin poetry, rhythm was not based on accent, but on the conventionalized time it took to pronounce syllables. Syllables were not accented or unaccented, as in modern poetry, from a standpoint of versification; but were long or short. Since two consonants occurring together made a syllable long, and a short vowel made a syllable short when followed by one consonant, the word honest was scanned as short-long: the rhythmic stress occurring on the second syllable, not on the first, as with us. Honest, pronounced in the classical Greek or Roman way, would be ta-TUM; with us, it is pronounced rhythmically TUM-ta, the accent falling on the first syllable.

This one example will show why verse written in English according to classical rules of scansion, based upon long and short syllables instead of accent, is unnatural and only slightly pleasing to the ear. It is no more at home among modern poets writing in English than Greek clothing or the Greek language would be.

Modern poetry written in English must be in words whose rhythm, based upon accent, tends toward uniformity rather than toward variety. Both prose and poetry have rhythm, the stream or flow of accented and unaccented syllables; in prose the pattern constantly varies, while in poetry it approaches some sort of regularity. This is clearly poetry:

Music, when soft voices die,
 Vibrates in the memory—
 Odours, when sweet violets sicken,
 Live within the sense they quicken.

Rose leaves, when the rose is dead,
 Are heap'd for the beloved's bed;
 And so thy thoughts, when Thou art gone,
 Love itself shall slumber on.

"Music, When Soft Voices Die,"
 Percy Bysshe Shelley.

It would be no less poetry if it were set up:

*Music, when soft voices die, vibrates in the memory.
 Odours, when sweet violets sicken, live within the sense they quicken. Rose leaves, when the rose is dead, are heap'd for the beloved's bed.
 And so thy thoughts, when Thou art gone, Love itself shall slumber on.*

It did not take the line division to make this poetry. Technically, the tendency toward regularity in the rhythm made it definitely verse and not prose, while its emotional appeal, to most people, makes it poetry. It is equally poetic in either typographic form. Set up the opening of the first chapter of this book in the same line division:

The word poetry is often used
 Loosely to mean whatever embodies
 The products of imagination
 And fancy, the finer emotions

And the sense of ideal beauty.
 In this lax usage, men speak of "The poetry of motion," the poetry
 Of Rodin or Wagner, the poetry

This is prose. No magic worked by the line division can bring it any closer to poetry. Only a comparative regularity in the alternation of accented and unaccented syllables can make it acceptable verse; this, plus the proper emotional appeal, alone can make it poetry.

Meter and Metric Feet

Meter is a comparatively regular rhythm in verse or poetry. There are four common metric feet used in English verse. Their names are taken over from classic durational or quantity meters. In the examples below, the accented syllable is marked thus (/), and the unaccented syllables thus (—). These feet are:

Name of Foot	Scan-sion	Description	Example	Example Scanned	Accent pronunciation
Iamb	— /	Unaccent—accent	Delight	De-light	ta-TUM
Trochee	/ —	Accent—unaccent	Going	Go-ing	TUM-ta
Anapest	— — /	Unaccent—unaccent— accent	Appertain	Ap-per-tain	ta-ta-TUM
Dactyl	/ — —	Accent—unaccent— unaccent	Merrily	Mer-ri-ly	TUM-ta-ta

The first two feet listed below are occasionally encountered in English verse, the third rarely or never.

Spondee	//	Accent—accent	Headlong	Head-long	TUM-TUM
Amphibrach	— / —	Unaccent— accent—un- accent	Believing	Be-liev-ing	ta-TUM-ta
Pyrrhic	— —	Unaccent— unaccent	with a	with a	ta-ta

In practice, the spondee may be used as an iamb or as a trochee; in combination, we may have—

In head | -long flight

in which the word is used as a trochee;

He plunged | head-long

in which the word is used as an iamb.

In actual verse and poetry, never forget that the actual rhythm of the words, as normally uttered in a conversational tone, differs from the artificial scansion pattern adopted. Take one of the most regular five-foot iambic lines in the language:

The curfew tolls the knell of parting day.
Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard,
 Thomas Gray.

Scanned normally, as this would be spoken, we have the following natural scansion:

The curfew | tolls | the knell | of parting | day.

Here we have one iamb, two feet consisting of mere accented syllables for which we have no name, and two feet of three syllables each (unaccent—accent—unaccent, or amphibrachs). Yet this is described as an ideal iambic line, because the pattern indubitably is:

ta TUM    ta TUM    ta TUM    ta TUM    ta TUM

To make the actual line fit the planned iambic pattern, we have to divide words as follows:

The cur- | few tolls | the knell | of part- | ing day.

Absolutely natural iambic lines are rare:

And dwell | upon | your grave | when you | are dead.
The Comedy of Errors, William Shakespeare.

A repetition of such lines would be monotonous, unnatural and intrinsically unpoetic.

To show a still further group of variations, the opening of Hamlet's most famous soliloquy, commencing "To be or not to be," is theoretically in the same iambic five-foot pattern: three lines, each consisting theoretically of five ta-TUM's. The actual scansion brings in strange and unusual feet, or groups of unaccents with one accent, and shows that these three lines have only four actual feet apiece (a foot being, in English, normally grouped around one accent), where the pattern called for five in each line:

To be | or not to be. | That | is the question.
 Whether | 'tis nobler | in the mind | to suffer
 The slings | and arrows | of outrageous | fortune . . .

Hamlet, William Shakespeare.

Here are four feet of two syllables each (two iambs and two trochees); four of three syllables each (three amphibrachs and one anapest); one of one syllable; and three of four syllables each (two of one type, one of another). And only four natural feet to each line.

This is acceptable five-foot iambic verse, in the hands of the world's greatest master. In later plays, his variations became more extreme, until at times his rhythms were less regular than Whitman's typical free verse or polyrhythmic poetry.

What is desired, in metric poetry, is a regular pattern, with restrained freedom and variety in its use. The poet should learn to scan his poetry—that is, to mark the accented and unaccented syllables as above, and then to divide it both into the natural speech rhythm and into the artificial pattern rhythm. There is no need for pride, if the poetry is excessively regular. As a rule, that means that it is strained and unnatural in phrasing, and to that extent falls below true greatness in technique.

In reading poetry aloud or to oneself, avoid most of all an unnatural singsong. Never read the lines from Hamlet as if they had been printed:

to BE or NOT to BE that IS the QUESTION.
 whe*THE*R 'tis *NO*bler IN the MIND to *SUF*fer
 the SLINGS and *AR*rows OF out*RA*geous *FOR*ture . . .

Instead, read this and all other poetry as naturally as if it were unpatterned prose. The pattern is there and will make itself felt. Excellence in reading depends upon naturalness in expression.

Iambic Verse

The commonest line pattern in English verse is based upon the iamb (– /). Many more words in English are trochees than iambs.

Iambic is the preferred pattern because such trochaic words are normally introduced by a one-syllabled unaccented article, preposition, or the like. Normally lines do not open with the trochee hoping, but rather with such a phrase as in hoping, for hoping, and hoping, this hoping, if hoping, and so on.

Lines name the metric pattern and are described by the type of foot and the number of feet to the line. Thus a one-foot iambic line could be written:

All hail!

A two-foot iambic line would be:

All hail to you!

A three-foot iambic line would be:

All hail to you, my friends!

A four-foot iambic line would be:

All hail to you, my worthy friends!

A five-foot iambic line would be:

All hail to you, my wholly worthy friends!

Note how naturally trochaic words like wholly and worthy fit into this iambic pattern. This line might have been:

In hailing friendship's wholly worthy sons, in which case four words (hailing, friendship's, wholly, worthy) are complete trochees in themselves, yet are transformed into word-split units in the iambic pattern, by the introductory unaccented word in and the concluding accented word sons. This is an entirely legitimate following of the iambic pattern, which can be most easily remembered as:

ta TUM

ta TUM

ta TUM

ta TUM.

A word ending on an accented syllable is said to have a masculine ending; one ending on an unaccented syllable, a feminine ending. The iambic pattern may be used with a feminine ending: that is, with the addition of an unaccented syllable to the last foot. A stanza of five lines, successively one-, two-, three-, four-, and five-foot iambic lines with feminine endings, could be manufactured easily:

Good morning,
Benignant April,
With all your rainbow blossoms,
With birds all carolling their rapture,
With love alive within the hearts of maidens.

The scansion for this would be:

Good morn- | ing,
Benig- | nant A- | pril,
With all | your rain- | bow blos- | soms,
With birds | all car- | oling | their rap- | ture,
With love | alive | within | the hearts | of maid- | ens.

This is often described as if the first line, for instance, were a two-foot line, with one syllable missing, and is called catalectic verse. The reality is that of an iambic foot followed by a loose or unattached, unaccented syllable.

Writing iambic verse is as easy as writing any form of verse. Get the metrical pattern firmly in mind:

ta TUM      ta TUM      ta TUM      ta TUM and then proceed to let the words flow into this pattern.

Iambic verse may be altered into trochaic at any time, by adding an accented syllable to each line's beginning or by removing the opening unaccented syllable. The process may be reversed as easily, thus changing trochaic verse into iambic. Start with this iambic version:

And then the little Hiawatha
Remarked unto the old Nokomis,
I know that hills are edged with valleys.

By adding an accented syllable at the beginning of each line, this becomes trochaic:

Now and then the little Hiawatha
Said aloud unto the old Nokomis,
Well I know that hills are edged with valleys.

By removing the opening unaccented syllable in each iambic line above, the lines are four-foot trochaic:

Then the little Hiawatha
Said unto the old Nokomis,
All the hills are edged with valleys.

This is the regular meter of Longfellow's Hiawatha and is as easy to write as iambic verse.

Trochaic Verse

Trochaic verse is less usual in English than iambic, because the custom of the language is to introduce most remarks with an unaccented syllable or word. Based upon the trochee (/ -), the pattern is, in the case of four-foot trochees,

TUM-ta      TUM-ta      TUM-ta      TUM-ta

Hiawatha opens upon this pattern:

Should you ask me, whence these stories,
Whence these legends and traditions,
With the odours of the forest,
With the dew and damp of meadows.
Hiawatha, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

In natural accent the first three of the lines quoted have only two accents apiece, and not four: so that the natural scansion, as of the third line, is

Round about the cauldron go;
 In the poisoned entrails throw.
 Toad, that under cold stone
 Days and nights has thirty-one Sweltered venom sleeping got,
 Boil thou first i' the charmed pot.
Macbeth, William Shakespeare.

An interesting variation here is the use of cold as a dissyllable, as if it were pronounced có-öld. It may be regarded as the one-syllabled cold, followed by a pause consuming the length of time it would take to pronounce an unaccented syllable. In any case, it is an effective variant device.

Trochaic verse might certainly be described with propriety as iambic verse, with the introductory unaccented syllable omitted in each line. The description is unimportant; the important thing is to choose, understand, and use adequately the pattern, whatever it is called.

Again, in the sixth line quoted above from Macbeth, there is an extra unaccented syllable, a sort of grace note, added: making the second foot in reality a dactyl:

Boil thou | first i' the | charmed | pot.

If preferred, though it is less usual, this could be scanned slightly differently:

Boil thou | first i' | the charmed | pot,

in which case there is an amphibrach in the third foot; or it might be scanned:

Boil thou | first i' | the char- | med pot,

regarding it as two trochees followed by two iambs. But the accepted pattern is trochaic four-foot, and the custom is to prefer the first scansion given. At any time, within reason dictated by the poet's own inner ear and sense of music, the substitution of an anapest or a dactyl for an iamb or a trochee is permitted. Or the substitution of a spondee (//), and any of the other feet (iamb, trochee, dactyl or spondee, as well as amphibrach, etc.) may be substituted for a foot in anapestic verse. Similar substitutions may take place in dactylic verse. The best poetry contains variety within uniformity.

Notice that in the trochaic lines from Macbeth the last unaccented syllable is omitted in every line. This again gives an example of catalectic verse. The name is unimportant: a trochaic line may end on a masculine ending as easily as an iambic line ends on a feminine ending. A dactylic line may end on a trochee or an accented syllable; an anapestic line may have an extra unaccented syllable, or even two of them, without losing its anapestic character. Variety in uniformity ...

Anapestic Verse

The anapest (— — /) is a foot of three syllables, the first two unaccented, the last accented. It may be described as an iamb with an extra unaccented syllable added before it. It may be indicated ta TUM, so that a three-foot anapestic pattern would be:

ta ta TUM            ta ta TUM            ta ta TUM.

A typical line following this pattern would be:

To the end of the world in the dawn.

The English language has more accented syllables than many others, and a succession of two unaccented syllables is comparatively infrequent. Constantly the anapestic pattern is broken by a foot called the amphimacer ( / — / ), accent—unaccent—accent, giving us a result such as:

Let me go anywhere I can find,

scanned as anapestic thus:

Let me go | anywhere | I can find,

but having a natural scansion consisting of three amphimacers:

Let me go | anywhere | I can find.

There are so few natural anapests in the language that this is usual and permitted. The same thing applies to dactylic verse. Even more unusual three-syllabled feet appear, each with two accents: the antibacchius (//—), the bacchius (—//), the tribrach (— — —), the molossus (///). In anapestic and dactylic verse, a fourth syllable, usually unaccented, again like a grace note, may appear in any foot. So long as such variations please the inner ear, the inner sense of word music, they are aids.

The natural poet will always make his own patterns, knowing that poetry is self-created and not devised by rigid rules.

Dactylic Verse

The dactyl (/— —) is a foot of three syllables, the first accented, the next two unaccented. It may be described as a trochee with an extra unaccented syllable added after it. Here is an illustration:

Cannon to right of them,
 Cannon to left of them,
 Cannon in front of them
     Volleyed and thundered;
 Stormed at with shot and shell,
 Boldly they fought, and well. . . .

The Charge of the Light Brigade, Alfred Tennyson.

Scanned as dactylic verse, this would appear:

Cannon to | right of them,
 Cannon to | left of them,
 Cannon in | front of them
     Volleyed and | thundered;
 Stormed at with | shot and shell,
 Boldly they | fought, and well.

As a matter of fact, these last two lines would have a different natural scansion, including amphimacers:

Stormed at with | shot and shell,
 Boldly they | fought, and well.

Once the technique of scansion is mastered, the poet must be his own court of last appeal upon it.

Dactylic verse is not wholly at home in English; and amphibrachic verse (using as its norm the amphibrach, - / -) is as much of an alien. These feet become excessively monotonous in long poems, though they may be used with advantage in brief lyrics.

Variations in Metric Verse

The use of variations in metric verse is widespread. The development of every poet of importance, whose technique did not begin and remain rigid and crystallized, has been in the direction of more and more variety. This is displayed impressively by the development of Shakespeare and of Keats. Little such development is shown in the technique of more rigid minor poets. A few examples must suffice. Shakespeare in his final peak period wrote lines whose natural scansion was as loose as:

A malady

Most in- | cident | to maids; | bold oxlips and
 The crown imperial; lilies of all kinds,

The flow- | er-de-luce | being one! O, these | I lack. . . .

The Winter's Tale, William Shakespeare.

The most unusual usage is the ending of the second line in the extraordinary foot which seems a spondee followed by a pyrrhic, (// - -). The reverse foot opens a line in one of his sonnets,

Of the wide world | dreaming | on things | to come.

Sonnet CVII, William Shakespeare.

One of the most praised lines in Keats is:

Here two spondees introduce the rest of the line, the scansion being as if his pattern were—

TUM TUM    TUM TUM    TUM ta    ta TUM    ta TUM

Keats has at least one line, in the same pattern, consisting of five trochees:

Robert Frost has such masterly lines as the following, in the same five-foot iambic pattern:

And spread her apron to it. She put out her hand. . . .
The Death of the Hired Man, Robert Frost.

The Black Cottage, Robert Frost.

"Out, Out—", Robert Frost.

So. But the hand was gone already.

In this last line the monosyllable So is followed by a pause that takes the place of a foot and a half. One of Frost's most triumphant variations is:

Little—less—nothing! And that ended it.

In natural scansion, this would be:

$\begin{array}{cccccc} / & \bar{ } & / & \bar{ } & / & \bar{ } & / & \bar{ } & / & \bar{ } \\ \text{Little—} & | & \text{less—} & | & \text{nothing!} & | & \text{And that ended it} \\ & & & & & & & & & \end{array}$

A common variation is an alternation of iamb and anapest, as in this old English ballad:

Ō Aí- | īson GROSS, | thát líves | in̄ yon̄ tower.
Alison Gross, Old English Ballad.

We find the reverse of this order in a Browning lyric,

Wh̄ere th̄e chaf- | fínch síngs | on̄ th̄e or- | chard̄ bough. . . .
Home-Thoughts, from Abroad, Robert Browning.

So numerous are the variations to which the metric pattern in English can be adapted, to the greater naturalness of the poetry.

Accent Pattern Instead of Metric

Coleridge, in one poem, abandoned the formal metric foot altogether, in favor of a rediscovered Old English method of letting the line pattern consist of a definite number of accents, with any number of unaccented syllables, occurring in any order. Here are the opening lines:

'Tis the mid- | dle of night | by the cas- | tle clock,
 And the owls | have awak- | ened the crow- | ing cock.
 Tú- | whit! | Tú- | whoo!
 And hark, | again; | the crow- | ing cock
 How drow- | sily | it crew.

Christabel, Samuel Taylor Coleridge.

Thomas Hood uses lines consisting of only three accented syllables,

Stitch! | Stitch! | Stitch!
 In pov- | erty, hung- | er and dirt. . . .
The Song of the Shirt, Thomas Hood.

This follows the same method of accent versification. Walter de la Mare's most famous poem is built around a pattern of three accents to the line, as the second and fourth line below indicate; he uses unaccented syllables where he pleases:

But on- | ly a host | of phan- | tom list- | eners
 That dwelt | in the lone | house then,
 Stood lis- | tening in the qui- | et of the moonlight |
 To that voice | from the world | of men.

The Listeners, Walter de la Mare.

Other modern poets have done as much, or more. Variety within uniformity . . .

Blank Verse and Free Verse

Blank verse means simply unrhymed verse. Any line pattern, if unrhymed, is blank verse. Heroic blank verse is unrhymed five-foot iambic poetry or verse. Most of Shakespeare is written in heroic blank verse. Heroic couplets, beloved of Dryden and Pope, are pairs of five-foot iambic lines rhymed with each other.

Free verse may be rhymed or unrhymed, although it is usually unrhymed, since rhyming is an even more unnatural convention of poetry than meter; and the poet who has abandoned formal meter will hardly, as a rule, still use the device of rhyming. Free verse is verse without a metric pattern, but with a wider pattern than meter allows. It still tends toward regularity, rather than variety, and the final court of appeals as to whether any example should be classified as poetry or prose from a standpoint of content, or as verse or prose from a standpoint of technique, is the individual poet or reader himself. To many readers, the following are all poetry:

 Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God. Thou turnest man to destruction; and sayest, return, ye

The Ninetieth Psalm.

But, in a larger sense, we cannot dedicate—we cannot consecrate—we cannot hallow—this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or to detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here; but it can never forget what they did here. . . .

The Gettysburg Address, Abraham Lincoln.

Out of the cradle endlessly rocking, out of the mockingbird's throat, the musical shuttle, out of the Ninth-month midnight, over the sterile sands, and the fields beyond, where the child leaving his bed wandered alone, bareheaded, barefoot, down from the showered halo, up from the mystic play of shadows twining and twisting as if they were alive. . . .

Out of the Cradle, Endlessly Rocking, Walt Whitman.

Walt Whitman used the artificial line division of poetry to present the third of these selections; the King James version of the Bible and Lincoln used the natural line division so familiar in the printing of prose. Little or nothing is added by the artificial line division:

Out of the cradle endlessly rocking,
Out of the mocking-bird's throat, the musical shuttle,
Out of the Ninth-month midnight,
Over the sterile sands, and the fields beyond, where the child leaving his bed wandered alone, bareheaded, barefoot,
Down from the showered halo,
Up from the mystic play of shadows twining and twisting as if they were alive. . . .

It is poetry, to many, in either form; and the first form is the more natural and readable. Scan the Whitman selection, or any of the others, and the tendency toward regularity of rhythm becomes apparent: a wider regularity, perhaps only an up rhythm or a down rhythm, but still inevitably there. This distinguishes free verse from prose, from the technical point of view.

At times writers of free verse let their lines reach surprising lengths, no matter how lovely the music is: thus Sandburg,

Pocahontas' body, lovely as a poplar, sweet as a red haw in November or a pawpaw in May, did she wonder? does she remember? in the dust, in the cool tombs. . . .

Cool Tombs, Carl Sandburg.

Again the lines can be extremely brief:

It sits looking over harbor and city on silent haunches
and then moves on.

Fog, Carl Sandburg.

The free verse writer devises his own line-division pattern. This form, eliminating the devices of meter and rhyme, calls on the poet to avoid the inconsequential and the trivial, and to write down only his important utterances. If rhyme is a shelter for mediocrity, as Shelley wrote in his preface to The Revolt of Islam, free verse is a test of the best that the poet has in him.

Line Length in Verse

Oliver Wendell Holmes, himself a doctor, advanced the theory that line length in verse marked physiologically the normal breathing of the poet. In other words, a breath should be taken at the end of each line; and the line should be no longer than the poet's ability to hold his breath. No artificial line division is used in prose, to indicate where a breath should be taken. There is no greater reason for artificial line division in poetry. It still remains true that the long Greek lines, each consisting of six feet, called for huge-breasted warrior-bards to chant them; that the norm of English verse, the five-foot iambic line, indicates a lesser chest expansion in the typical English poet; and that the briefer modern tendency shows a further deterioration in the chest expansion of poets.

Where poetry consists in end-stopped lines—lines with a natural pause at the end of each line—there is more reason for an artificial line division. Shakespeare began so; many poets never get beyond this, in the main. But when we come to poetry like—

We are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life

Is rounded with a sleep,
The Tempest, William Shakespeare.

the break comes after on, and not after stuff or life; and the last reason for the artificial line division has vanished.

A sonnet set up in this manner appears:

O bitter moon, O cold and bitter moon, climbing your midnight hillside of bleak sky, the earth, as you, once knew a blazing noon. Night brings the silver hour when she will die. We shall be cold as you are, and as bitter, icily circling toward a tepid fire, playing at life with our deceitful glitter, past joy, past hope, forever past desire.

Yet still the forest lifts its leafy wings to flutter for a while before the chill. And still the careless heart is gay, and sings in the green temple on the dusty hill. And the gulls tumble, and the homing ships peer for the harbor. . . .

And the sand drips.

The Flight of the Eagle, v, Clement Wood.

In an earlier volume, this had appeared with the usual line division of poetry as ordinarily printed. Rhyme can occur of course in ordinary prose, although this usage is extremely rare. Where the rhythm of verse is used, as in the sonnet quoted, it is possible for poets to use the line and paragraph division usual to prose, if this is desired.

IMPORTANT CLASSICAL TERMS FOR POETIC DEVICES

VERSES AND GROUPS OF VERSES

Classical Name	Common Name, or Explanation
Monometer	A verse containing one metrical foot.
Dimeter	A verse containing two metrical feet.
Dipody	A measure consisting of two metrical feet; a ditrochee.
Trimeter	A verse containing three metrical feet.
Tetrameter	A verse containing four metrical feet.
Pentameter	A verse containing five metrical feet.
Hexameter	A verse containing six metrical feet.

Heptameter	A verse containing seven metrical feet.
Octometer	A verse containing eight metrical feet.

UNUSUAL METRIC FEET

Tribrach	Three unaccented syllables	— — —
Molossus	Three accented syllables	/ / /
Amphimacer	Accent, unaccent, accent	/ — /
Bacchius	Unaccent, accent, accent	— / /
Antibacchius	Accent, accent, unaccent	/ / —
Ditrochee	Two trochees regarded as a compound foot	/ — / —
Paeon	Accent, unaccent, unaccent, unaccent	/ — — —
Choriamb	Accent, unaccent, unaccent, accent	/ — — /
Epitrite	Three accents and one unaccent: of the first, second, third or fourth class, depending on the location of the unaccented syllable	/ / / —

OTHER TERMS

Classical Name	Explanation
Acatalectic Verse	Verse not defective in the last foot; verse complete in its number of syllables.
Arsis	The lighter or unstressed part of a foot, especially in quantitative verse; later, the accented syllable of a foot.
Caesura	A break in a verse caused by the ending of a word within a foot. A masculine caesura follows the thesis or stressed part of a foot. A feminine caesura follows the arsis or caesura comes after the third half foot, which means in the second foot; a penthemimeral caesura , after the fifth half foot; a hepthemimeral caesura , after the seventh half foot; and so on. A bucolic caesura , in dactylic hexameter, is a caesura occurring in the fourth foot, especially in pastoral poetry.

- Catalectic Verse Verse lacking a syllable at the beginning, or terminating in an imperfect foot.
- Diaeresis, Dieresis The break caused by the coincidence of the end of a foot with the end of a word. Bucolic diaeresis, a diaeresis occurring in the fourth foot, especially in pastoral poetry.
- Enjambement The extension of the sentence beyond the limitations of the distich.
- Ictus Metrical stress.
- Thesis The heavier or stressed part of a foot in classical prosody, especially in quantitative verse; later, the unaccented syllable or syllables of a verse.

THE TECHNIQUE OF VERSIFICATION: RHYME

Correct and Incorrect Rhyme

RHYME IS AS simple to define as rhythm is difficult.

Rhyme is the identity in sound of an accented vowel in a word, usually the last one accented, and of all consonantal and vowel sounds following it; with a difference in the sound of the consonant immediately preceding the accented vowel.

Rhyme deals exclusively with sounds and has nothing to do with spelling. The rhyming dictionary terminating this book is strictly phonetic and therefore logical and useful.

Correct rhymes may be spelled alike:

ate, plate, mate, abate, syncopate.

They may be spelled differently:

ate, bait, straight, freight.

In this case the spelling is immaterial.

So called "eye rhymes"—that is, words spelled alike that look alike but are pronounced differently—are not rhymes at all; they slip into versification, if at all, as consonance, which will be discussed later. That is, the incorrect rhyme earth, hearth

so popular among English versifiers, is no more a rhyme than the following sets of words identically spelled, but pronounced differently:

cow, blow climber, timber finger, ginger, singer
 cough, enough, plough, though, through.

Identities do not rhyme, no matter what the spelling is; since the preceding consonantal sounds must differ. The following are identities, and not rhymes:

bay, obey bare, bear, forbear
 laying, overlaying ability, possibility, probability.

Sounds almost alike, after the identical accented vowel sounds, do not rhyme. These are properly called assonance and have not succeeded as a versification device in English. Examples are:

main, game, reins, lamed hate, shape, played feed, sleet, creep sandwich, orange, lozenge childhood, wildwood Norfolk, war talk anguish, Flatbush silver, deliver

You can find examples of incorrect rhymes in poems by many accepted poets, and in a much higher percentage of popular songs and newspaper versification. Two of the above examples were taken directly out of songs nationally popular. Slovenly rhyming is one of the sure signs of mediocrity in versification. Learn correct rhyming first; then, if you wish to break the rule you understand, that is your privilege.

The language's poverty in rhyming has caused the following almost-rhymes to become widely accepted:

given, Heaven; bosom, blossom; shadow, meadow;
 God, road; war, more; bliss, is; was, grass.

Among widely used "eye rhymes," which are not rhymes at all, but mere identities in spelling, are:

earth, hearth; bare, are; north, forth; real, steal.

Bosom-blossom, was-grass are combinations of consonance and assonance; bliss-is is assonance; the others in the first list are consonance. The first three pairs in the second set are acceptable consonance; real, steal is an attempt to rhyme a two-syllabled word with a one-syllabled one and has no justification from any standpoint. Use consonance or assonance purposely, if desired; but always know that this is not correct rhyming.

If the poet is tone-deaf as to sounds, it is best to rely upon the phonetic symbols above each group of rhyming words in the rhyming dictionary that terminates this book, or upon dictionary markings. Many people cannot distinguish the obvious difference in sounds between this pair of words, which do not rhyme:

north, forth.

Take away the th sound, and many people still hear no difference between this pair of words, which do not rhyme:

nor, fore.

Take away the r sound, and some people still hear no difference between this pair of words, which do not rhyme:

gnaw, foe.

Gnaw plus r plus th cannot rhyme with foe plus r plus th. If in doubt as to such off-rhymes, follow the phonetic markings.

A third common error in rhyming comes from such mispronunciations as dropping a terminal -g. These do not rhyme:

martin, parting.
herding, burden.

They may be rhymed colloquially, that is, in quoted words, as follows:

martin, partin',
herdin', burden,

the latter being not quite a rhyme at that. But unless writing colloquially, do not use such incorrect rhymes as those given first above. A similar error comes from ignoring the r sounds, which causes such off-rhymes as:

court (pronounced cou't, like coat), boat
Lord (pronounced Lawd), gaud.

Rhymes can be made of two or more words. Here are examples of perfect rhymes:

satin, flat in.
Quentin, went in.
pray tin, hate in.

Such couplings are more appropriate to light and humorous verse than to serious poetry. Rhyming must always give the effect of unobtrusive naturalness, or it fails of its proper effect.

Robert Browning is in a class by himself in fantastic many-word rhymings and near-rhymings, often in serious verse:

The wolf, fox, bear and monkey
By piping advice in one key. . . .
Pacchiarotto, and How He Worked
in Distemper, et cetera,

Robert Browning.

This is not a rhyme, because monkey is, phonetically, a rhyme sound for üngki, or at best üngke; and one key is, phonetically, a rhyme sound for ünkē, the unguessed g sound in the first spoiling it as a rhyme. Again, in the same poem, he uses this fantastic coupling:

While, treading down rose and ranunculus,
You Tommy-make-room-for-your-uncle-us!

Ranunculus has its rhyme sound ungk'-ū-lus; the next line, üngk'-ōl-us: a minor difference, but enough to spoil the rhyme. Much closer is Byron's celebrated couplet:

O ye lords of ladies intellectual,
Inform us truly, have they not henpecked you all?
Don Juan, I, xxii, Lord Byron.

The unaccented last syllable of the first line differs from the unaccented last syllable of the second with the difference of ā and ô. Barham furnishes many perfect many-worded rhymes, such as:

Should it even set fire to one's castle and burn it, you're Amply insured for both building and furniture. . . .
Sir Rupert the Fearless,
 Richard Harris Barham (Thomas Ingoldsby).

Samuel Hoffenstein furnishes a splendid example:

You haven't the nerve to take bichloride;
 You lie up nights till you're gaunt and sore-eyed,
Poems in Praise of Practically Nothing,
 Samuel Hoffenstein.

In using such rhyme combinations, it is wise to put the combination with the inevitable sound first; bichloride; following this with the combination of words to rhyme with it. Thus W. S. Gilbert, a master rhymester, uses in this order:

monotony, got any.
 cerebellum too, tell 'em to.

In light and humorous verse, such rhyming cleverness is a crown; in serious verse, if used sparingly, it is permitted.

Function and Types of Rhyme

In serious verse, since obvious cleverness defeats the appeal to the serious emotions, rhyming should be unobtrusive. To have your rhyme words merely conveniences demanded by your rhyming pattern is one of the chief faults of rhymed verse.

Rhyme is a potent shaper. Once you have written down a line of verse or poetry, and intend to have the next line or the next line but one rhyme with it, your choice of terminal words for the rhyming line is limited by the limited rhyming resources of the language. If a poet commences,

October is the wildest month, he has estopped himself from any rhyme, since month has no rhyme in English.

Assuming that the first line's rhyming word has certain rhyming mates, the choice of terminal rhyme words for the rhyming line is limited to these; and the direction of the poet's thought and its expression must be deflected into some natural use of one of these rhyming mate words. Rhyming is a brain stimulant and may even spur on the poetic imagination. The meaning of the planned poem may have been clear in the mind; but its expression, if rhyme is used, must work in limited fields, and only the master achieves in these that finality of natural utterance which is one of the charms of great poetry.

To the authentic poet, especially the living poet, there is no such thing as poetic license: the right to warp and twist the language out of its natural order or grammar, to suit the exigencies of rhyme. Mr. Browning continued his Tommy-make-room-for-your-uncle-us couplet with this:

Quick march! for Xanthippe, my housemaid,
If once on your pates she a souse made. . . .
I would not for worlds be your place in,
Recipient of slops from the basin!

What Browning meant, in the direct natural order, was:

Quick march! for Xanthippe, my housemaid,
If once she made a souse on your pates,
I would not for worlds be in your place,
Recipient of slops from the basin!

Even this is unnatural; the real order would be "Quick march! for if once Xanthippe, my housemaid, made . . ." etc. Let us suppose that inspiration worked with him in the erratic fashion quoted above. Then would be the time for the critical sense to come in, and rigorously to eliminate all such evidences of poetic license—inversions, ungrammatical constructions, and the like. Not one has a place in poetry, more than in speech.

This is a rigid rule to lay down. It is not any individual's rule. It is the rule that Shakespeare followed when he wrote:

Tomorrow, and tomorrow, and tomorrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day

To the last syllable of recorded time,
 And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
 The way to dusty death. Out, out, brief candle!
 Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player
 That struts and frets his hour upon the stage
 And then is heard no more; it is a tale
 Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,
 Signifying nothing.

Macbeth, William Shakespeare.

This was written some three hundred years ago. There is not an obsolete or even archaic word in it, not a strained construction, not an inversion or instance of ungrammatical poetic license. The quotation given in fragmentary form from Browning, which includes ranunculus, homunculus, skoramis, and countless inversions, was outdated long ago: the words of Shakespeare live. The best of Burns, of Shelley, of the Keats of Hyperion, of the best among the modern poets, always follows this rule: no inversions, no archaisms, no poetic license. This is the price of a chance for wide poetic greatness.

To return to the strict technique of rhyming, one-syllabled rhymes are called single or masculine rhymes. Examples are:

we, flee, sea, apostrophe, harmony.
 fling, sing, carolling.

In the last pair of the first grouping, and the third rhymes in the others, note that only a secondary accent falls on the rhyming syllable. This is enough. A rhyme may be more smothered, if read naturally—a modern variation in which it may be said that an accented syllable is rhymed with an unaccented one: such as anguish, wish; ring, wedding. Used sparingly, this is effective.

Two-syllabled rhymes are called double or feminine rhymes. Examples are:

ocean, motion, devotion.
 traded, aided, play did.
 see us, flee us.

Three-syllabled rhymes are called triple rhymes. Examples:

saleable, mailable.
 lyrical, miracle, empirical, satirical.
 rest of it, best of it, palimpsest of it.

There may be rhymes, especially in light verse, of four or even more syllables. A rhyme like the one last given shows little cleverness, since it is merely "rest, best, palimpsest" with the phrase "of it" added. The lack of cleverness makes it more suitable for serious poetry than for light verse.

End rhyme is used at the end of the lines. Here is an example, the rhyming words being italicized, and the rhyme scheme indicated by the corresponding numerals:

Gather ye rose-buds while ye may ,	1
Old Time is still a-flying ;	2
And this same flower that smiles today ,	1
Tomorrow will be dying .	2
Counsel to Girls , Robert Herrick.

Rhyme 1 is a single or masculine rhyme; rhyme 2 is a double or feminine rhyme.

Internal rhyme is rhyme used within the line, to give added effectiveness by a closer repetition of the rhyming sounds.

"Each day, all day," these poor folk say,
 "In the same old year-long, drear-long way,
 We weave in the mills and heave in the kilns,
 We sieve mine-meshes under the hills,
 And thieve much gold from the Devil's bank tills,
 To relieve, O God, what manner of ills?"

The Symphony, Sidney Lanier.

Here year-long rhymes internally with drear-long; weave, heave, sieve, thieve and relieve are further internal rhymes; and mills is an internal rhyme to kilns and the three next end rhymes.

Undesirable Rhymes

Incorrect rhymes, or rhymes constructed by straining the natural expression into inversions and grammatical perversions, excused on the outworn plea of poetic license, are always undesirable. Quite as undesirable are rhymes which are hackneyed and overworked, such as:

kiss, bliss.
 yearn, burn; yearning, burning.
 love, dove, above.

These are unobjectionable technically. But they have been so used and overused by other poets that the only excuse for them today is use in an entirely new manner.

It is the fact that most rhymes have been comparatively overworked that has caused the tendency toward consonance, which is such a marked feature of modern poetry, from Emily Dickinson onward.

Alliteration

Alliteration, like rhyme, is a repetition of sounds. But the sound repeated is only the initial consonant of syllables or words. This was one of the major devices of Anglo-Saxon poetry, which did not use rhyme. Langland's Piers Plowman opens:

In a summer season, when soft was the sun,
 I shope me in shroudes, as I a sheep were
The Vision of Piers Plowman, William Langland.

Alliteration is used effectively by later poets in connection with rhyme, as this example illustrates:

Whether tempter sent, or whether tempest tossed thee here ashore,
 Desolate yet all undaunted, on this desert land enchanted,
 In this home by Horror haunted, tell me truly, I implore.
The Raven, Edgar Allan Poe.

If not overused, this is highly effective. Swinburne was one of the masters of alliteration, tending to overuse it, as in—

The lilies and languors of virtue
 For the roses and rapture of vice.
Dolores, Algernon Charles Swinburne.

Where there is no sense of unnaturalness in the repetition of alliterative sounds, it may be successfully employed.

Assonance

Assonance, called also vowel rhyme, consists in the identity of the final accented vowel sound, with dissimilarity in the subsequent consonantal and vowel sounds. It was used in Provençal and Old French poetry, and is still used in Spanish. George Eliot tried unsuccessfully to introduce it into English, the assonances being italicized:

Maiden crowned with glossy blackness,
 Lithe as panther forest-roaming,
 Long-armed naead, when she dances,
 On the stream of ether floating,
 Bright, O bright Fedalma!
Song of Joan, in The Spanish Gipsy, George Eliot.

The repetition here is not sufficiently marked to make this device popular in English versification. Typical groups of assonantal masculine or single-rhymed endings are:

grab, crack, had, tan, sham, hang, fat face, shade, hate, pain, claim, male led, wreck, hem, then, set, step bide, kine, fight, pipe, wise, advice

In feminine endings, we would have:

aiming, faded, scraping, hailing, painter, lateness roaming, floated, coping, goader, golden coming, dumbness, stubborn, rustle

Unpopular so far, at any time assonance may achieve a popularity in English versification.

Consonance

Consonance, also loosely called off rhymes, sour rhymes and analyzed rhymes, consists in an identity of all consonantal and vowel sounds after the accented vowel; and a difference in the accented vowels. An improvised model would be:

There's a golden willow Underneath a hill,
By a babbling shallow
Brook and waterfall;

And a mill-wheel turning
Under moon and sun,
As if gently scorning
Time and tide and man.

There can be any combination of end and internal consonance with end or internal rhyme in the same poem, according to the best modern practice: the poet himself being the judge of what form is most pleasing to his inner sense of music, and that of his prospective readers.

Edna St. Vincent Millay, in The Poet and His Book, uses these pairs of words in consonance:

She also twice uses assonance:

cupboard, upward; only, homely.

Elinor Wylie uses such instances of consonance as:

bloody, body; people, ripple; mourner, corner; primer, dreamer; standard, pondered; noble, trouble; music, physic; Circe, hearsay; Vulcan, falcon; languish, distinguish; lost, ghost; sword, lord; suns, bronze;

and many more. Emily Dickinson is more lavish in her use of consonance than any of these.

The reason has been hinted before: the limited field of rhymes in the language, in spite of the impressive length of any rhyming dictionary. One advantage of a phonetic rhyming dictionary is that it makes the use of precise and accurate consonance possible. Words are arranged by rhyme and not by consonance; and yet the phonetic arrangement gives a start toward arriving at accurate consonance. If the following method is used, consonance can be achieved by little more effort than is required for rhyme.

There are five a sounds that occur in accented syllables; three e's; two i's; six o's; and three u's, or a total of nineteen vowel sounds appearing in accented syllables. Most of these sets are grouped together: most of the a's; two of the e's (omitting the e followed by r, which appears only when er is reached); both of the i's, and so on. Thus ĀD is followed by ĂD and this by ȦD, so that we may proceed directly from rhyming sounds like aid to sad and then to charade. In double rhymes, Ō'lē, ÔL'ē and ŎL'ē follow in regular sequence; thus holy, Macaulay and folly are near neighbors.

Suppose it is desired to locate all the consonance sounds possible for a line ending with holy. Turn under the a's to all the phonetic symbols similar to Ō'lē—Ă'lē (as, daily), ĂL'ē (as, alley); under e, to Ē'lē (as, freely), ĔL'ē (as, jelly); under i, to Ī'lē (as, dryly) and ĪL'ē (as, hilly); also under o to ŌOL'ē (as, woolly), OIL'ē (as, oily); under u, to Ū'lē (as truly) and ŪL'ē (as, dully). Look up also OUL'ē and other possible vowel combinations, to make sure there are no rhyme sounds under them. And now the poet has an accurate test to see which words are in precise consonance with holy, and which are not.

Thus this most modern of all sound-repetition devices in English versification can be achieved most perfectly through the use of a phonetic rhyming dictionary. The phonetic symbols, of course, must be in precise alphabetical order. Turn, under each of the five vowels (not forgetting the vowel sounds OI, ŌO, and OU come alphabetically also), to the vowel followed by the identical consonant and vowel sounds following the accented vowel in the rhymed syllable you wish consonances for; and all consonances that the lists of words afford will be found.

There is small adventure in rhyming, except in the made rhymes of two or more words more common to light verse. Compilers of rhyming dictionaries have completed the adventure long ago. There is great adventure in the use of consonance, which expands the sound-repetition resources of the language. It is possible to write a poem where not one of the consonance couplets has been used before. The adventurous will not overlook this.

Your Mental Rhyming Dictionary

As times it is inconvenient or impossible to have a rhyming dictionary available. Especially where the poet desires to write such a piece of formal verse as a ballade, requiring fourteen rhymes on one sound, no two of which could be identical, it is advisable to be able to improvise your own temporary rhyming dictionary.

The method is simple. First write down all the single, double and triple consonantal sounds you can remember. It is not necessary to write down all of them, although for your convenience the list on page 41 is approximately complete.

Having jotted down as many of these as you remember, test the rhyme sound desired against this table, and write out the results. Thus, if the rhymes to aye, the long  $\bar{A}$  sound, are desired, the poet would get, to begin with, of the single consonantal sounds:

aye, bay, day, fay, gay, hay, jay, kay or cay, lay, may, nay or neigh, pay, ray, say, décolleté for the t sound, survey for the v sound, way, yea.

Be careful, when a one-syllabled rhyme in such an instance is missing, to use ingenuity to find longer words with the desired rhyme, as décolleté, survey.

Then, for the double consonantal sound rhymes, the following could be added:

redoublé for the bl sound, bray, dray, flay, fray, gray, clay, McCrae for the cr sound, play, pray or prey, shay, risqué for the sk sound, slay, dismay perhaps for the sm sound, stay, sway, they, tray, tway.

In addition, the triple consonantal sounds would give:

splay, spray, stray.

Altogether this has furnished thirty-nine rhymes for aye: and this is more than enough to satisfy the requirements of any formal verse.

Suppose only four rhymes for the purposes of the rhyming pattern are needed, and the poet decides to use huge as one of them. Using the above rhyming dictionary, only a group of f rhymes are discovered—febrifuge, subterfuge, vermifuge and so on; and perhaps, if the poet is expert in pronunciation, gamboge, which also rhymes with it. But no fourth rhyming sound. The huge rhyme sound would then have to be discarded and some other sound tried.

Try a double rhyme, ended. Using this mental rhyming dictionary, the poet discovers:

ended, bended, fended or defended, Jen did, Len did, mended or amended, depended, rended, tended or attended, vended, wended,

and, using double and triple consonantal initial sounds, blended, friended and befriended, expended for sp, extended for st, trended, then did, splendid, and this can be supplemented with men did and many other two-word rhymes. Here are at least eighteen rhyming mates, which can be used as the 2 rhyme in a ballade, which requires fourteen rhyming mates.

So even if the rhyming dictionary is left behind, a mental rhyming dictionary can always be improvised, once the mechanism is learned.

STANZA PATTERNS

The Couplet

A SINGLE LINE of poetry is called, technically, a verse of poetry. A series of lines arranged formally as a part of a poem is called a stanza. Stanza forms may be rigid, with a fixed order of sequence as to line length, meter, or rhyme; or they may be mere divisions of a poem, corresponding to the paragraphs of prose.

The simplest stanza is one of two lines, called a couplet. The word couplet is used to mean either a two-line poem, or a two-line stanza—that is, a part of a poem; and this is equally true of triplets or tercets, quatrains and so on. It may be rhymed:

“Where are you going, my pretty maid?” 1
“I’m going a milking, sir,” she said. 1

Mother Goose’s Nursery Rhymes.

Naturally, if our stanza has only two lines, it can be rhymed in only one way: each line followed immediately by its rhyming mate. This is called rhyming in couplets, and is indicated by 1, 1. The second rhyme sound used in the poem would be designated by 2, the third by 3, and so on. Thus a series of couplet stanzas, if rhymed, would be rhymed 1, 1; 2, 3, 3; and so on. This is called couplet rhyming, a term used of any lines rhymed in this fashion, even when not divided into separate couplet stanzas.

Five-foot iambic lines rhymed couplet fashion are called heroic couplets. This was the favorite measure employed by Dryden and Pope, who enriched the language with many polished quotations:

Vice is a monster of so frightful mien 1
As, to be hated, needs but to be seen; 1
Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face, 2
We first endure, then pity, then embrace. 2

An Essay on Man, Alexander Pope.

These pairs of lines are not stanzas, much less complete two-line poems. Thus couplet is used with the third meaning of a method of rhyming—the 1, 1; 2, 2 method.

A couplet need not be rhymed: it may be an unrhymed two-line poem, or two-line stanza. It may be in any rhythm or combination of rhythms.

The Triplet or Tercet

A group of three lines, whether a complete poem or a stanza, is called a triplet, or tercet. This is not as common a form as the couplet or the four-line form, the quatrain. An example is:

A still small voice spake unto me,	1
“Life is so full of misery,	1
Were it not better not to be?”	1
The Two Voices , Alfred Tennyson.

It is clear that with three lines to work from, the lines in such a group might be rhymed 1, 1, 2, in which the third line rhymes with nothing in the triplet; or 1, 2, 2; or 1, 2, 1. In the case of groups of triplet stanzas, the rhymes may be interlocked:

Make me thy lyre, even as the forest is:	1
What if my leaves are falling like its own!	2
The tumult of thy mighty harmonies	1
Will take from both a deep autumnal tone,	2
Sweet though in sadness. Be thou, Spirit fierce,	3
My spirit! Be thou me, impetuous one!	2
Drive my dead thoughts over the universe	3
Like withered leaves to quicken a new birth!	4
And, by the incantation of this verse,	3
Scatter, as from an unextinguished hearth	4
Ashes and sparks, my words among mankind!	5
Be through my lips to unawakened earth	4
The trumpet of a prophecy! O wind,	5
If Winter comes, can Spring be far behind?	5
Ode to the West Wind , Percy Bysshe Shelley.

This interlocked rhyming, where the unrhymed middle line of one triplet becomes the rhymed first and third lines of the next, the whole ending with a thirteenth and fourteenth line rhyming with the unrhymed central line of the preceding triplet, is a special Italian verse stanza form, called terza rima. As Shelley used it, it might be regarded as an apt variation of the Shakespearean sonnet. It may be constituted of less or more triplets, always followed by such a concluding couplet.

Notice, in the hands of this master, the rhyming devices. Is-harmonies illustrates rhyming a primary accent with a secondary one: and the secondary one is an indeterminate sound, more often rhymed with seas than with is, which gives it the effect of partial consonance. Fierce-universe is consonance, not rhyme, as is birth-hearth-earth, long defended as an "eye rhyme," but admissible as consonance. The same is true of mankind-wind-behind. It is incorrect to pronounce the noun wind as if it were the verb to wind; wind here rhymed with thinned, and is in consonance with behind.

Triplets may be in any rhythm, including free verse or polyrhythm. And they may be unrhymed:

I have had playmates, I have had companions,
In my days of childhood, in my joyful school-days;
All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.

I have been laughing, I have been carousing,
Drinking late, sitting late, with my bosom cronies;

The Old Familiar Faces, Charles Lamb.

In this poem Lamb invented his own pattern—unrhymed six-foot trochaic in the main, with seven feet in the fifth line; and with the terminal line of each triplet a refrain, repeated without alteration. Any poet may make his own pattern for any poem he wishes; and, if it finds favor, it may become a standard pattern.

The Quatrain

A quatrain is a stanza or poem of four lines. This is the most popular brief stanza in English versification, and has a variety of familiar rhyme schemes. Ordinary ballad meter was originally seven-foot iambic rhymed couplets:

As Robin Hood in the forest strayed, all under the greenwood tree, 1
Old English Ballad.

As normally printed today, this becomes a quatrain, with the first and third lines unrhymed, and only the second and fourth rhyming—a rhyme scheme that may be used with other meters as well, and with any number of feet to each line:

As Robin Hood in the forest strayed, 1
 All under the greenwood tree, 2
 He was aware of a brave young man, 3
 As fine as fine might be. 2

Almost as popular is the quatrain rhymed on alternate lines:

A violet by a mossy stone 1
 Half-hidden from the eye! 2 —Fair as a star, when only one 1
 Is shining in the sky. 2
The Lost Love, William Wordsworth.

Quatrains may be rhymed couplet-wise:

Tiger, tiger, burning bright 1
 In the forests of the night, 1
 What immortal hand or eye 2
 Could frame thy fearful symmetry? 2
The Tiger, William Blake.

Note that this is not indented: that is, that line two is set directly under line one. The purpose of indentation is primarily to show the rhyme scheme: lines rhyming with each other may be normally set beneath each other, as in the two previous examples. Indentation is used either to show identities of rhyme, or to center briefer lines in a stanza or poem.

The In Memoriam stanza is built upon a four-foot iambic pattern, rhymed as follows:

Ring out old shapes of foul disease; 1
 Ring out the narrowing lust of gold; 2

Ring out the thousand wars of old,	2
Ring in the thousand years of peace.	1
In Memoriam , Alfred Tennyson.

Edward Fitzgerald's translation or recreation of the quatrains or Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám has one of the most famous quatrain rhyme patterns in the language, using five-foot iambic lines:

The Moving Finger writes; and, having writ,	1
Moves on: nor all your Piety nor Wit	1
Shall lure it back to cancel half a Line	2
Nor all your Tears wash out a Word of it.	1
The Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám , translated by Edward Fitzgerald.

Other possible quatrain rhyme arrangements are: 1, 1, 1, 1; 1, 1, 1, 2; 2, 2, 2, 2; 1, 2, 1, 1; 1, 2, 3, 1; 1, 1, 2, 3; 1, 2, 3, 3; 1, 2, 2, 3; and no doubt others. Hereafter, no additional rhyming patterns will be listed, since by now it should be understood that none is forbidden.

As for the number of feet to the line in these quatrains, the number for the better-known patterns is as follows:

Ballad Meter, 4, 3, 4, 3. Called also Long Meter in hymns.
In Memoriam, 4, 4, 4, 4.
Rubáiyát, 5, 5, 5, 5.
 Short Meter (in hymns), 3, 3, 4, 3.

This last was popular in the sixteenth century as Poulter's measure. These four are all in iambic lines. Of course, any metric foot or combination of feet may be employed. It need not be repeated again that the quatrain, as any other stanza, may be unrhymed or may be in polyrhythm.

Stanzas of More Than Four Lines

A five-line stanza or poem is called a cinquain. Adelaide Crapsey invented one containing 1, 2, 3, 4 and 1 iambic feet respectively in the lines:

These be
 Three silent things:
 The falling snow . . . the hour
 Before the dawn . . . the mouth of one Just dead.

Triad, Adelaide Crapsey.

A rhymed cinquain is used in one of Shelley's best-known odes:

Hail to thee, blithe Spirit!	1
Bird thou never wert,	2
That from heaven, or near it,	1
Pourest thy full heart	2
In profuse strains of unpremeditated art.	2

To a Skylark, Percy Bysshe Shelley.

Notice how the indentation centers the briefer lines, as well as indicating, in the first four, rhyming mates. The number of feet here is 3, 3, 3, 3, 6. A terminal six-foot iambic line is called an Alexandrine; this was constantly used with iambic five-foot lines as a terminal.

Shelley uses this pattern throughout his poem To a Skylark. Poe, another master craftsman, altered his rhyme and meter pattern from stanza to stanza in his greatest lyrics. The familiar love song To Helen ("Helen, thy beauty is to me—") has, in his three cinquains or five-line stanzas, these three different rhyme arrangements; 1, 2, 1, 2, 2; 3, 4, 3, 4, 3; 5, 6, 6, 5, 6. To his inner musical ear, these changes were more musical than regularity could have been.

A six-line stanza is called a sextet or sestet. Here is an example:

Fear no more the heat o' the sun	1
Nor the furious winter's rages;	2
Thou thy worldly task hast done,	1
Home art gone and ta'en thy wages:	2
Golden lads and girls all must,	3
As chimney-sweepers, come to dust.	3

Dirge from Cymbeline, William Shakespeare.

The trochaic pattern here is four-foot lines. One of the favorite stanzas of Robert Burns has the iambic pattern of 4, 4, 4, 2, 4, 2; as in his To a Field-Mouse:

Wee, sleekit, cow'rin', tim'rous beastie,	1
O what a panic's in thy breastie!	1
Thou need na start awa sae hasty,	1
Wi' bickering brattle!	2
I wad be laith to rin and chase thee	1
Wi' murd'ring pattle!	2

To a Field-Mouse, Robert Burns.

The consonance beastie, breastie, hasty, chase thee was to be expected in the hands of a master. A popular pattern (using an unusual trochaic 4, 4, 2, 4, 4, 2 measure) was used by Whittier:

And if I should live to be	1
The last leaf upon the tree	1
In the spring,	2
Let them laugh, as I do now,	3
At the old, forsaken bough	3
Where I cling.	2

The Last Leaf, Oliver Wendell Holmes.

This may be used in longer stanzas, with a scheme such as 1, 1, 1, 2, 3, 3, 3, 2, a variant of this being popularized by Tennyson:

Willows whiten, aspens quiver,	1
Little breezes dusk and shiver	1
Through the wave that runs for ever	1
By the island in the river	1
Flowing down to Camelot.	2
Four gray walls, and four gray towers,	3
Overlook a space of flowers,	3
And the silent isle embowers	3
The Lady of Shalott.	2

The Lady of Shalott, Alfred Tennyson.

This stanza is called a tail rhyme stanza and is a mere elaboration of the pattern of The Last Leaf.

Certain Other Stanzas

It may seem like profanation to some, to subject to the critical scalpel such a masterpiece as Keats's Ode to a Grecian Urn. But the poem suffers no loss from the process, for the reader returns to it to find it all uninjured in the end; and no other method will permit an understanding of the technical achievement involved in such lasting beauty. Here are five ten-line stanzas. Each opens with a 1, 2, 1, 2 sequence. Thereafter there are differences. The first and last have the next six lines 3, 4, 5, 4, 3, 5; the fourth and fifth use instead 3, 4, 5, 3, 4, 5; while the second has 3, 4, 5, 3, 5, 4.

A famous seven-lined stanza is called Rhyme Royal. This was used by James I of Scotland in his The Kinges Quhair, and repeatedly by Chaucer and others. Here is a typical use by Chaucer:

To you, my purse, and to none other wight	1
Complain I, for ye be my lady dear.	2
I am full sorry, now that ye be light,	1
For, certes, ye now make be heavy cheer.	2
Me were as lief-y laid upon my bier	2
For which unto your mercy thus I cry,	3
Be heavy again, or elles mote I die.	3

The Complaint to His Empty Purse, Geoffrey Chaucer.

This has a terminal couplet rhyming 3, 3, which breaks the flow of the narrative somewhat. To avoid this, the Canopus stanza points a way out:

The night's mysterious wings pulsed thru the dark,	1
The night's mysterious noises cracked and shivered,	2
And where their fingers met a visible spark	1
Seemed to leap forth at them, and pulsed and quivered	2
Throughout them both. Their thickened tongues were dumb,	3
The pretty words of star-lore undelivered,	2
The pretty words that found no breath would come.	3

Canopus, Clement Wood.

Note here also that the use of some feminine or double rhymes with single or masculine rhymes is effective. This is especially effective in a Shakespearean sonnet.

Ottava rima is an Italian stanza adopted in English by many poets. It is an eight-line stanza, composed of a sestet rhymed alternately, followed by a terminal rhyming couplet. The Italians use their heroic meter, eleven syllables to the line, in it; the English prefer iambic five-foot measure. Spenser, Milton, and Keats used it, and Byron preferred it, as in his Don Juan:

But "why then publish?"—There are no rewards	1
Of fame or profit when the world grows weary.	2
I ask in turn,—Why do you play at cards?	1
Why drink? Why read?—To make some hour less dreary.	2
It occupies me to turn back regards	1
On what I've seen or pondered, sad or cheery;	2
And what I write I cast upon the stream	3
To sink or swim—I have had at least my dream.	3
Don Juan, Lord Byron.

Again note the use of double and single rhymes in the same stanza, quite often effective.

The Spenserian stanza was invented by Edmund Spenser, and has long been used in serious dignified verse. The eight opening five-foot iambic lines are terminated by an Alexandrine, or six-foot iambic line; the pattern may be seen in this opening of Keats's poem, which uses the stanza throughout:

St. Agnes' Eve—ah, bitter chill it was!	1
The owl, for all his feathers, was acold.	2
The hare limped trembling through the frozen grass,	1
And silent was the flock in woolly fold.	2
Numb was the Beadsman's fingers while he told	2
His rosary, and while his frosted breath	3
Like pious incense from a censer old,	2
Seemed taking flight for heaven without a death.	3
Past the sweet Virgin's picture, while his prayer he saith.	3
The Eve of St. Agnes, John Keats.

Terza rima is an iambic rhythm, usually of five feet to the line. It is usually written continuously, and not in stanzas. It consists of groups of three lines, rhymed 1, 2, 1; but the rhyming sound of the middle line, 2, becomes the first and third line of the next group; and so on. The end of the canto or poem is a couplet, tying up the rhyme sound left loose as the central line terminal sound in the preceding triplet. Thus it is a sort of chain verse, its rhyme scheme proceeding: 1, 2, 1; 2, 3, 2; 3, 4, 3; 4, 5, 4; . . . . . n-1, n, n-1; n, n. Shelley, in his Ode to the West Wind, used this in fourteen-line groups, separating the triplets and concluding couplet as if they were separate stanzas.

It is advisable for the poet or versifier to spend some time in the

This may be written in English, with an accent basis instead of a quantity basis (that is, long and short syllables).

Hendecasyllabics were eleven-syllabled lines composed of a spondee, a dactyl, and trochees. Thus:

This meter has never been successfully naturalized into English.

Alcaics, named from the lyric poet Alcaeus, a contemporary of Sappho, are of several kinds. The first variety has a five-foot line, consisting of a spondee or iamb, an iamb, a long syllable, and two dactyls. Here is the pattern:

or -| -|/|/|/~-|/~-

The second variety has two dactyls and two trochees to the line:

/~-|/~-|/~-|/~-

And, for the third, the line is composed:

(I) -///
	or
(II) /-// or
(III) //~/		/~- /~-
	or	(stress on 1st or 4th syllable)
(IV) ///~				-//
	or			(Stress on first long syllable)

What are the names of these feet? The first is an epitrite (first, second, third or fourth epitrite, depending upon the location of the short syllable); two choriambi or choriambes as above; and a bacchius. This technique does not often produce poetry in English; more often, it produces prosody or verse.

For an Alcaic ode, each strophe consists of four lines. The first two are eleven-syllabled Alcaics of the first kind; the third an especial form of iambic two-foot of nine syllables, described as hypercatalectic; and the fourth a ten-syllabled Alcaic of the second kind. Tennyson tried to catch it in:

O mighty-mouthed inventor of harmonies,
O skilled to sing of time or eternity,

God-gifted organ-voice of England,
Milton, a name to resound for ages.

Milton, Alfred Tennyson.

Sapphics are named after the poet Sappho, who is said to have used the form with high skill. A sapphic line consists of five equal beats, its central one of three syllables, and the rest of two each. The original Greek sapphic stanza consisted of three of these lines, followed by a shorter line called an adonic, the whole following this pattern:

Certain English poets have essayed this meter. In the examples given, the accent sign ( / ) means a syllable described as long; the other symbol ( - ) means one described as short. Here is Swinburne's use of the form:

Saw the | white im- | placable | Aphro- | dite,
 Saw the | hair un- | bound and the | feet un- | sandalled
 Shine as | fire of | sunset on | western | waters;
 Saw the re- | luctant

Feet, the straining plumes of the doves that drew her,
Looking, always looking with necks reverted,
Back to Lesbos, back to the hills whereunder
Shone Mitylene

Sapphics, Algernon Charles Swinburne.

and so on to the end. A choriambic line consists of a spondee, three choriambi and an iamb. A galliambic line is composed of iambs, one of which drops its final syllable, the next foot to the last being an anapest.

Indentation

The purpose of indentation is primarily to indicate the rhyme scheme. Indenting a line means sinking it inward by an increased blank space in the left-hand margin. Every paragraph in prose is indented at its beginning. An early indentation of poetry was similar to this, and consisted in indenting only the first line of each stanza. Where the poet desires to impress the reader with his rhyme scheme, indenting of lines rhymed is proper:

Yet this inconstancy is such
As you too shall adore:
I could not love thee, Dear, so much,
Loved I not Honour more.
To Lucasta, on Going to the Wars, Richard Lovelace.

The following indentation is improper and essentially illiterate:

That which her slender waist confined
Shall now my joyful temples bind:
No monarch but would give his crown
His arms might do what this has done.
On a Girdle, Edmund Waller.

Needless to say, the poet set this up without indentation. The motive for such misindentation seems to be the following foggy thinking on the part of the versifier:

- (a) Some poems by great poets are indented.
- (b) Therefore I must indent my poem, to make sure it is regarded as great.

Once the motive for indentation is learned—to show the similarity of rhyme sounds terminating lines indented to the same point—this error will be avoided.

A second purpose of indentation is to center short lines in the central portion of the poem, instead of leaving them dangling off to the left. One of Guy Wetmore Carryll's eight verse poems proceeds:

A maiden from the Bosphorus,
 With eyes as bright as phosphorus,
     Once wed the wealthy bailiff
             Of the caliph
             Of Kelat.

Though diligent and zealous, he Became a slave to jealousy.
     (Considering her beauty,
       'Twas his duty
       To be that!)

How the Helpmate of Bluebeard Made Free with a Door, Guy Wetmore.

Here the first, third, fourth and sixth indentations indicate rhyming changes; the second and fifth are to center briefer rhyming lines. The object is to make the poem appear as presentable as possible, considering the rhyme scheme and length of line. Recall the indentation of Shelley's To a Skylark, already given.

As to sonnets, there are only two proper ways to present them: indenting for rhyme and omitting indentation. The Italian and Shakespearean form would then have the following indentation, if this is used to indicate the rhyme scheme:

Italian Sonnet

It is more usual to set up sonnets without indentation. The original method of indenting the Shakespearean sonnet consisted of twelve lines without indentation and an indentation for the concluding couplet.

All this assumes that the poet wishes to impress on the reader the rhyming scheme and the poet's fidelity in following it. But this is initiating the reader into the irrelevant laboratory work of the poet, and has its many disadvantages, since the reader primarily wishes to know what the poet has to say, not the devices by which he increases his effectiveness. The modern tendency is to eliminate the indentation in all poems. If poems are printed similarly to prose, the indentation will be the same as prose, to indicate paragraph openings, or to insert a quotation.

DIVISIONS OF POETRY

Narrative Poetry

POETRY IS COMMONLY divided, from the point of view of the poet's presentation of his material, into narrative, dramatic, and lyric poetry. The distinction is simple:

- In narrative poetry, the poet tells us a story as if he had been a spectator, but not a participant, in the events.
- In dramatic poetry, the poet lets the characters of the story speak their own words.
- In lyric poetry, the poet speaks his own moods, thoughts and aspirations.

These, like all definitions, define from the centers, not from the boundaries. A long-winded narrative in the first person, telling the poet's own adventures, might be classed with reason as any of the three: narrative poetry because it tells a story; dramatic, like a long dramatic monologue; and lyric, because the poet himself is speaking. This attitude classification is not of primary importance.

A fourth division, didactic poetry, that which teaches or points a moral, was once popular and is still encountered. It is regarded at best as a low flight of poetry.

Epic, Metrical Romance, Tale

An epic is a long narrative poem, dealing with heroic events, usually with supernatural guidance and participation in the action. Epics are divided into natural or folk epics, and literary epics. There is a suggested theory that folk epics are preceded by and composed of folk ballads. The earliest known epics exhibit little or no trace of any welding or amalgamating process.

The earliest literary remains in Greece are of the epic type, of three varieties. Epics of personal romance and war center around the semimythical blind bard Homer, with his Iliad—the story of the flight of Helen of Sparta with her Trojan lover, Paris; the war of Greeks against Trojans to avenge this; the anger of Greek Achilles and its effects; the defeat of Troy—and the Odyssey, telling the world wanderings of Grecian Odysseus after the sack of Troy, and of his return to his native Ithaca. Parts of these long poems are essentially prosy; but they have never been equalled for long poetic flight in narrative form. Epics dealing with the mysteries of religion center around the mythical singer Orpheus. Epics of a didactic nature center around the name of Hesiod. Scholars state that many lost epics in all three fields preceded the epics now remaining.

The Mahabharata and the Ramayana in Sanskrit, the Shahnameh in Persian, the Nibelungenlied in Middle German, Beowulf in Anglo-Saxon, the fragmentary Elder Edda from Iceland, the Poem of the Cid from Spain, the Song of Roland in medieval France, the Kalevala from Finland are all folk epics. They originated before the invention of writing and were transmitted orally, with inevitable changes and additions from time to time. Literary epics are a later attempt to catch the charm of the ancient epics; and as a rule they are a lower flight. Virgil's Aeneid, Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered, Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, Dante's didactic Commedia are the most outstanding among these. The Lusiads of Camoëns gave form to the Portuguese language, much as Dante did to modern Italian, Chaucer to English and Luther to German. Spenser's Faerie Queene has lost most of its charm for many modern English readers; even Milton's Paradise Lost, which sought to express English Puritanism as Dante had sought to express medieval Catholicism, is largely dull to modern readers.

Stories in verse preceded stories in prose. Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, the narrative metrical romances and tales of Scott, Byron and others, preceded the novel and the short story in English. But prose has become the popular medium, as it is the more natural one, and the long poetic narrative today usually seems artificial.

Ballad

The ballad, the brief story in verse, alone retains some general popularity. The name meant first a folk song-and-dance, like the surviving London Bridge Is Falling Down or Oats, Peas, Beans and Barley Grow. It came to mean the folksong that tells a brief story—at first to be sung, later to be said or read. The Germanic bards or scalds, the gleemen, harpers, minstrels, troubadours, and minnesingers were a distinguished lot—the oral literature (and music) of races in the pre-bookish age. The chief figures in the ballads at first were noble, since nobles were the patrons of the singers. Later on, the lower classes became vocal—the oppressed Saxons in the Robin Hood ballads, and many early ballads in which a commoner ends by marrying one of noble lineage. The technique at first was simple, often with a simple refrain that the hearers might chorus. In English, the first ballad meter was seven-foot iambic lines, rhymed in couplets. A variant of this is the Scottish ballad Edward, Edward, with a pause between the invoked names taking the place of a foot in alternate lines:

“Quhy does zour brand sae drop wi’ bluid, Edward, Edward?
 Quhy does zour brand sae drop wi’ bluid, and quhy sae sad gang zee, O?”

“Oh, I hae kill-ed my hauke sae guid, Mither, Mither, O, I hae kill-ed my hauke sae guid; and I had nae mair but he, O.”

Like the majority of the older ballads, this is a gory thing, full of blood and stark universal passions. If modern poetry gave us more of such red meat instead of caviar canapés, it would hold a wider popularity than it now has.

The rhythm is much freer than centuries of later iambic versification. The modern versifier can learn much of the way to sprinkle anapests in an iambic pattern, and of more important devices in versification, from old English folk ballads, as from that other depository of English folk verse, Mother Goose. Folk ballads originate among people largely pre-bookish; certain American mountaineers and certain Negroes still commemorate thrilling events with folk ballads, like the one within our memory on The Sinking of the Titanic.

Literary ballads are more successful than literary epics. Ballads by Heine and Housman, or Coleridge’s Rime of the Ancient Mariner, have been taken to the heart of the race. The stanza form is almost invariably simple. Yet it is worthwhile to study the slight elaborations of the ballad meter that Coleridge employed—with stanzas ranging from four to nine ballad half-lines. There are many more successful literary ballads.

Dramatic Poetry

Like storytelling, drama is largely a lost field to poetry, purely because of the unnaturalness of poetic drama as usually written. There is a field for drama in natural free verse, which may yet be widely used. Classic drama was divided into tragedy, a play ending in death, and comedy, a play not ending in death. This division was unworkable and has been abandoned today.

Thespis, reputed father of Grecian drama, never permitted more than one actor on the stage at one time, with a chorus to interpret the action to the audience. This rigid convention was shattered by Aeschylus, who added a second actor. Sophocles added a third; but classic Greek drama never permitted a fourth. The typical Shakespearean play had five acts, the climax occurring during the third act, the solution at the end. This usually meant a dragging fourth act, which only Othello among the great tragedies avoided. Shakespeare and most other English verse dramatists used a five-foot iambic line, most often in blank or unrhymed verse. None of these conventions are more sacred than the one-actor convention of Thespis.

The dramatic monologue, or dramatic lyric, sprung from the speeches of Thespis's actor and the unnatural soliloquy of classic and English drama, is the one form of drama in verse which preserves considerable popularity. Robert Browning made this field peculiarly his own, with such magnificent dramatic vignettes as My Last Duchess, Andrea del Sarto, Caliban upon Setebos and so many more. His tremendous The Ring and the Book is, within a brief framework, ten immense dramatic monologues: the same group of facts, as seen through the eyes of ten differing personalities. Such dramatic monologues may be in any rhythm, any line length, and with or without rhyme. Success comes in proportion to the naturalness of the speech, the universality and depth of the emotion displayed, and the accuracy in character drawing.

Lyric Poetry: Ode, Elegy, Pastoral

Perhaps the earliest, and certainly the most enduringly popular type of poetry, is the lyric. As the name indicates, it meant originally poetry to be sung to the lyre—a dance at first accompanying this.

The ode, the most exalted form of lyric poetry, had strict rules in classic times. The Greek Pindaric ode had three movements: a strophe, in which the chorus moved from a given spot toward the right; the antistrophe, following the same versification pattern, and to the same tune, in which the chorus moved correspondingly to the left; and the concluding epode, different in structure, sung to a different tune, and with the chorus standing still. Efforts to revive this form in English have not succeeded. In English, the ode is a dignified lyric on some high theme, with constant progress in its stanzas toward its conclusion. Familiar odes in English include Wordsworth's:

Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting;
 The Soul that rises with us, our life's Star,
   Hath elsewhere its setting
   And cometh from afar;
 Not in entire forgetfulness,
 And not in utter nakedness,
 But trailing clouds of glory do we come
 From God, who is our home.

Heaven lies about us in our infancy!

Ode on the Intimations of Immortality from Recollections of Early Childhood

and also the great odes by Shelley and Keats already referred to.

An elegy is a formal expression of the poet's grief at death, whether general or centered about the death of an individual. It has no more definite a pattern in English than the ode. Milton, in Lycidas, uses an iambic measure, with lines of differing lengths, and a fluidic rhyme scheme. Shelley, in Adonais, chose the Spenserian stanza. Tennyson, in In Memoriam, selected the quatrain pattern already encountered. Whitman, in his major Lincoln threnody, When Lilacs Last in the Dooryard Bloomed, wrote in magnificent polyrhythmic verse. Gray's familiar Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard, alone among these a meditation upon death in general, used alternate-rhymed five-foot iambic lines. There are many familiar short elegies in the language.

The pastoral is a reflective lyric upon some aspect of nature, formerly concerned with shepherd life, whence its name. Milton's shapely L'Allegro and Il Penseroso, and Whittier's Snowbound, are examples in this genre. As city living increasingly replaces country living, some form of city lyric may supplant the pastoral, if it does not die without offspring.

The Simple Lyric: The Song

The word song is loosely used for any simple lyric, on the theory that it may always be set to music. It is best to reserve the word for a lyric intended to be set to music. This calls for a knowledge, on the part of the poet, of the human voice in music, and the ease or difficulty with which the various sounds are produced. Certain consonants and combinations of consonants are singable only with great difficulty. A line like:

The gross-sized much-touched scratch will itch is not easily singable. The terminal consonants m, n, l, r are sung with ease; s, z, ch, sh, as terminals, with difficulty. Of the vowels, broad a, long o, long a, ou are easiest to sing, though no vowel is really difficult. The words chosen should always end, and as far as possible include, only sounds which open the mouth, instead of closing it. Simple words are to be preferred to complicated ones; definite precise words to indefinite abstract ones; emotion-evoking words to intellectualized ones.

The lyric canon in English is one of the glories of its literature. After the dawn-hour lyrics before the Elizabethan age, the golden song of Campion—

Shall I come, sweet Love, to thee,
 When the evening beams are set?
 Shall I not excluded be,
 Will you find no feigned let?
 Let me not, for pity, more
 Tell the long hours at your door
Shall I Come, Sweet Love? Thomas Campion.

the equally melodious singable lyrics of Shakespeare and his contemporaries, the lyrics of Shelley, Keats, Byron, Burns, Housman and so many more in England, and of Poe, Emily Dickinson, Sidney Lanier and a few later singers, together make up a body of song that the race continues to treasure.

The themes and treatments of the lyric may vary as widely as the desires and visions of the poets. A lyric may have any chosen form of rhythm, with or without rhyme. It is often natural and effective in free verse or polyrhythmic poetry, since in this form the precise emotion-moving thoughts and images may be written down, without the warping often demanded by such devices of versification as rhyme, assonance, consonance, and formal meter and stanza arrangement. Here is an example from the chief American user of the form, in a lyric called Reconciliation:

Word over all, beautiful as the sky,
 Beautiful that war and all its deeds of carnage must in time be utterly lost,
 That the hands of the sisters Death and Night incessantly softly wash again, and ever again,
 this soil'd world;
 For my enemy is dead, a man divine as myself is dead,
 I look where he lies white-faced and still in the coffin—I draw near,
 Bend down and touch lightly with my lips the white face in the coffin.

Reconciliation, Walt Whitman.

Modern users of polyrhythmic poetry as a rule use less eloquence than Whitman and less of the expansive cosmic note, and tend instead toward the tense and gripping emotional appeal usual in rhymed and metric lyrics. Much shorter line division is also common.

The Sonnet

The sonnet is the most popular fixed form in English. It is a lyric of fourteen iambic five-foot lines, with a defined and definite rhyme scheme. There are two forms of it widely used in English, the Italian or Petrarchan sonnet, and the Shakespearean sonnet.

The rhyme scheme of the Italian sonnet appears from the following example:

The world is too much with us; late and soon;	1
Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers:	2
Little we see in Nature that is ours;	2
We have given our hearts away, a sordid boon!	1
This sea that bares her bosom to the moon,	1
The winds that will be howling at all hours,	2
And are up-gathered now like sleeping flowers;	2

For this, for everything, we are out of tune;	1
It moves us not.—Great God! I'd rather be	3
A Pagan suckled in a creed outworn;	4
So might I, standing on this pleasant lea,	3
Have glimpses that would make me less forlorn;	4
Have sight of Proteus rising from the sea;	3
Or hear old Triton blow his wreathéd horn.	4

Sonnet, William Wordsworth.

The first eight lines of any sonnet are called the octave. In the Italian sonnet, the rhyme scheme is rigid and may not be departed from. The octave consists of two quatrains rhymed 1, 2, 2, 1, the In Memoriam rhyming pattern made familiar by Tennyson's use of it. The entire octave then rhymes 1, 2, 2, 1; 1, 2, 2, 1. It is not permitted to vary the rhymes in the second half of the octave, by using 1, 2, 2, 1; 3, 2, 2, 3, or a form too commonly encountered, 1, 2, 2, 1; 3, 4, 4, 3.

The concluding six lines of any sonnet are called the sestet. The two permissible rhyme schemes for the sestet of an Italian sonnet are 3, 4, 3, 4, 3, 4, and 3, 4, 5, 3, 4, 5. It will be noted that the sonnet by Wordsworth, quoted above, uses the proper octave rhyme scheme and the first of these two sestet arrangements.

As to treatment, the octave must be end-stopped—that is, the eighth line must mark the termination of a sentence. Even the halves of the octave should be end-stopped. The first quatrain should introduce the theme and develop it in a certain direction; the second should continue this development in the same direction. The sestet introduces a new development in a different direction, with the first tercet carrying this new direction to a definite point; and the final tercet bringing the theme to a conclusion. The actual movement of the strict Italian sonnet may be expressed as a flow in the octave and an ebb in the sestet—so Theodore Watts-Dunton phrased it in his sonnet The Sonnet's Voice. This does not mean, of course, that the inspiration or the emotional effect should ebb.

Wordsworth's sonnet, emotionally effective as it is, violates several of these strict rules. The octave movement does not end with the eighth line, but trespasses into the ninth. There is no break in thought between the two tercets that together comprise the sestet. We will find constantly among the masters violations of the rules, at times in the nature of experiments; none of these has as yet established its popularity in English poetry. In his sonnet On the Extinction of the Venetian Republic, Wordsworth's octave rhymes 1, 2, 2, 1; 1, 3, 3, 1—another variation.

One authority examined 6,283 Italian sonnets in English and found these variations for the terminal sestet rhymes:

3, 4, 5, 3, 4, 5	3, 3, 4, 5, 5, 4
3, 4, 3, 4, 5, 5	3, 4, 5, 5, 3, 4
3, 4, 4, 3, 5, 5	3, 4, 5, 5, 4, 3
3, 4, 5, 4, 3, 5	3, 4, 4, 5, 3, 5
3, 4, 3, 5, 4, 5	3, 4, 5, 4, 5, 3
3, 4, 5, 3, 5, 4	3, 4, 3, 5, 5, 4

Two of these have terminal couplets, the most regrettable variation of the Italian sonnet. Six others include a couplet somewhere within the sestet. In addition to the above, the following two-rhyme variants are found:

3, 4, 3, 4, 3, 4	3, 4, 3, 4, 4, 3
3, 4, 4, 3, 3, 4	3, 4, 3, 3, 4, 4
3, 4, 4, 3, 4, 3	3, 4, 3, 3, 4, 3

Only the first excludes any couplet rhyming. Shelley's poem Ozymandias had the rhyme scheme 1, 2, 1, 2; 1, 3, 4, 3; 5, 4, 5, 6, 5, 6. Milton led the way in failing to separate clearly the octave and sestet, so much so that his type of sonnet is sometimes called the Miltonic-Italian in rhyme pattern, but without the characteristic Italian flow and ebb of theme, broken after the eighth line.

The Shakespearean sonnet is simpler and more natural in rhyming, and is in wider favor among English-using poets. An example is:

When, in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes,	1
I all alone beweepe my outcast state,	2
And trouble deaf heaven with my bootless cries,	1
And look upon myself and curse my fate,	2
Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,	3
Featur'd like him, like him with friends possess'd,	4
Desiring this man's art and that man's scope,	3
With what I most enjoy contented least;	4
Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,	5
Haply I think on thee, and then my state,	6
Like to the lark at break of day arising	5

From sullen earth, sings hymns at heaven's gate;	6
For thy sweet love remember'd such wealth brings	7
That then I scorn to change my state with kings.	7

Sonnet XXIX, William Shakespeare.

This is the accepted Shakespearean indentation for this form: though it may be indented to show rhyming mates, as the Italian also may be. Both types of the sonnet at times are printed with octave and sestet separated, making a poem of two stanzas; or an octave divided into two quatrains, and at times the sestet similarly divided.

The rhyming scheme of the Shakespearean sonnet is three quatrains—1, 2, 1, 2; 3, 4, 3, 4; 5, 6, 5, 6—with a concluding couplet, 7, 7. A shrewd interspersing of double or feminine rhymes aids. Many variations have been tried on this simple rhyming basis. Sir Philip Sidney repeated the rhymes of the first quatrain in the second, giving him a pattern of 1, 2, 1, 2; 1, 2, 1, 2; 3, 4, 3, 4; 5, 5. Spenser, in his 120 sonnets, used a chain-verse device of interlocking rhymes throughout each sonnet, so that his pattern was: 1, 2, 1, 2; 2, 3, 2, 3; 3, 4, 3, 4; 5, 5. Keats, in his second sonnet on Fame, wedded the Shakespearean octave to the Italian sestet, with his rhyme scheme 1, 2, 1, 2; 3, 4, 3, 4; 5, 6, 5, 7, 7, 6. Rupert Brooke, in the first and fifth of his soldier sonnets, used the Shakespearean octave and a straight Italian sestet: 5, 6, 7, 5, 6, 7. The third and fourth of the same series also wander from any strict pattern.

The sonnet was invented in Italy in the 13th century, probably by Pier delle Vigne, Secretary of State in the Sicilian court of Frederick. His sonnet Però ch' amore is the earliest known. His rhyme form—1, 2, 1, 2; 1, 2, 1, 2; 3, 4, 5, 3, 4, 5—has never become popular in English. The French sonnet prefers the strict Italian octave, with a sestet of three rhymes commencing with a couplet. This also has not become naturalized in English. There are occasional variations in English poetry, such as 1, 2, 1, 2; 2, 1, 2, 1; 3, 4, 3, 4, 5, 5; Italian sonnets with sestet 3, 4, 3, 4, 5, 5; and so on. Watts-Dunton points out, in his article on the sonnet in the eleventh edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica, that the charm of this and other fixed forms comes from familiarity in advance with the rhyme scheme to be followed; and that this charm is dissipated when any break in the expected rhyme scheme occurs. We feel somewhat as if we listened to a limerick with an extra foot or an extra line: a sense of surprise, its pleasure being doubtful. In spite of this, poets continue to vary the rigid forms from time to time and will continue to do so.

The sonnet, of either form, is used by many poets as a fourteen-line stanza. Many of the Elizabethan sonnet sequences illustrate this; and there are many more recent examples. In writing the sonnet, it will aid to write down the rhyme scheme to the right of the space where your lines are to be written, and thereafter to mark across from each numbered rhyme the initial consonantal sounds used: giving a check against repeating a rhyming sound (that is, identity), which is inexcusable false rhyming. We would then have a notebook page like:

		Rhyme Sounds
		ŌLD	ĒN	ĪZ	ĔN
Much have I travell'd in the realms of gold	1	G
And many goodly states and kingdoms seen;	2		S
Round many western islands have I been	2		B
Which bards in fealty to Apollo hold.	1	H
Oft of one wide expanse had I been told	1	T
That deep-browed Homer ruled as his demesne:	2		M
Yet never did I breathe its pure serene	2		R
Till I heard Chapman speak out loud and bold.	1	B
—Then felt I like some watcher of the skies	3			SK
When a new planet swims into his ken;	4				K
Or like stout Cortez—when with eagle eyes	3			Vowel
He stared at the Pacific—and all his men	4				M
Look'd at each other with a wild surmise—	3			M
Silent, upon a peak in Darien.	4				Vowel

On First Looking into Chapman's Homer, John Keats.

Thus, by this check, it appears that the poet used, for rhyme 1, ŌLD, these consonantal sounds: g, h, t, b; for rhyme 2, ĒN, s, b, m, r; for rhyme 3, ĪZ, sk, the unconsonanted vowel sound, and m; for rhyme 4, ĔN, k, m, and the unconsonanted vowel sound. No identities; rhyme throughout. The sonnet, from a technical rhyming standpoint, has no flaws. When this method is followed during the writing of the sonnet—the first group of columns, that containing the numerals, properly indented, being written down first—this gives a check as the writing of the sonnet proceeds and saves much rewriting.

THE FRENCH FORMS, LIGHT AND HUMOROUS VERSE

Formal and Light Verse

ANY POETIC FORM may be used either to arouse the great serious emotions or the lighter and more frivolous ones. Nor is there any reason for holding the serious poet higher than the comic poet. Surely Aristophanes, the great Athenian comic dramatist, ranked as high and was doubtless more popular and influential than any of the great serious triad, Aeschylus, Sophocles and Euripides. Shakespeare the comic dramatist, the author of Merry Wives of Windsor, Midsummer Night's Dream, The Taming of the Shrew, is as impressive a figure as the Shakespeare who let the melancholy Dane live and die in Elsinore, the Shakespeare who was the chronicler of Othello's jealousy and Lear's senility. Cervantes, who jeered knighthood to death, is greater as a writer than any other Spaniard; Racine, Molière, Voltaire, Anatole France were greatest as satirists; and so the roll continues. Serious writers and poets are more popular and are taken more seriously; but this may be because it is more civilized and difficult to laugh than to weep. Animals can suffer agonies; but they cannot chuckle. And yet the race would not willingly exchange Robert Burns's Tam o' Shanter and W. S. Gilbert's The Bab Ballads for any number of closet dramas, ponderous versified essays and odes, or a whole trainload of lyrics to spring and young love.

Fixed forms of poetry tend to become outgrown, like a child's shirt too small to close over a man's heart. They then become relegated to minor versifiers, to light verse writers, and to college and high school exercises. Prose ages more quickly than poetry: witness such masterpieces, written for adults, as the world's great fairy stories, Aesop's fables, the Arabian Nights, Robinson Crusoe, Gulliver's Travels in the nursery; and the essays and novels of yesterday encountered in school or college. Poetry itself ages: Shakespeare, Milton, Virgil, Horace are more used in the classroom than in the living room today, and so of the rest of them. In spite of constant insistence that nothing changes under the sun, the nature of man is stretched outward by his expanding environment, and coiled more tensely into molecules and atoms and complexes and other inner things; and the poetry, the concentrated heart's expression, of yesterday cannot forever be the poetry of today. Prose, in the large, must be rephrased every fifty years or less to be enjoyable to living men; poetry survives longer, but the hour will come when the most enduring poem of a Shakespeare or a Sappho will seem ancient, and must be restated or recreated by a living poet, to speak again for the maturing soul of man. If this is true of the poetry itself, it is truer of the patterns in which poetry has been uttered, and especially of the fixed forms.

The sonnet, an emigrant from Italy that became naturalized in English literature, still holds its own as a major method of expressing serious poetry, in the eyes of many poets and readers. Even at that, it is now regarded as puerile by the extreme advocates of free verse or polyrhythmic poetry, especially since Whitman and the Imagist movement. Numerous other alien verse forms did not fare so well and have established themselves primarily as mediums for light and humorous verse. These include the ballade, the rondeau, the villanelle, the triolet, and so on. This may be because of their rigid rules and formal repetitions, which were not acceptable to the living poet. And yet they started as seriously as Sapphics, heroic blank verse, or polyrhythms. . . .

Of all the forms of verse originating in medieval Provence, among those that failed to acclimatize themselves in English are the vers, canzo, sirvente, tenso, alba, serena, pastorella, breu-doble, and the retroensa. Only the most elaborate of the lot, the intricate sestina, has survived in English. When religious crusades wiped out this culture, the germs of formalized verse took root in northern France, especially under Charles d'Orleans and François Villon. The ballade appeared. Spenser used 3,848 of his nine-line Spenserian stanzas in one poem: across the Channel, Eustache Deschamps, a friend of Chaucer's, left no less than 1, 175 complete ballades. Froissart the chronicler wrote many. Charles d'Orleans is hailed as the early master of the roundel, as Villon is lauded as the prince of ballade-makers. Jean Passerat gave the villanelle its present form in the sixteenth century; Voiture, a century later, perfected the rondeau. In the seventeenth century, after the forms had been known for two hundred years in English, Patrick Carey published a series of dignified religious triolets; and the overartificialized forms have repeatedly been revived since.

Rules of the Fixed Verse Forms

In English verse, the rules for the fixed forms are stricter than in French:

- I. No syllable once used as a rhyme can be used again in the same poem as a rhyme—not even if it is spelled differently or if the whole word is altered by a prefix.

This bars such identities as Ruth, a girl's name, and ruth, pity; bear, an animal, bear, to support, bare, forbear, and so on; sale and sail; claim, reclaim, and disclaim; facility, imbecility; and, if this is taken as a single rhyme, not a triple one, it forbids the use of more than one from this group: tea, manatee, imbecility, impossibility, lenity, and so on.

As to the refrain, an important element in many of these forms:

- II. The refrain must not be a meaningless repetition of sounds as in many English ballads; it must aid in the progress of the thought; come in naturally; and be repeated in all its sounds, without any change of sound.

Slipshod versifiers alter the refrain by changing the introductory word, as by using an and for a but, a then for an if. This is unforgiveable. But the requirement goes no further than the repetition of all sounds. Punctuation may be changed, spelling may be changed, meaning may be changed: permitting the following—

It's meet, this sale; Its meat, this sale.
Gray day; Grade aye; Grade A.

The Ballade Family

There are two standard forms of the ballade. The more usual one consists of three stanzas of eight lines each; followed by a concluding quatrain, known as the envoy. It is thus a poem of twenty-eight lines, or twice the length of a sonnet. Each stanza, and the envoy, terminate with a line repeated sound by sound, and called the refrain. The rhyme scheme is 1, 2, 1, 2, 2, 3, 2, 3R for each stanza, 3R being the refrain; and 2, 3, 2, 3R for the envoy. The rules of the ballade may be stated as follows:

- I. The same set of rhyme sounds used in the first stanza, in the same order, must be used in each stanza; and the last half of this scheme must be used in the envoy.
- II. No rhyme sound, once used as a rhyme, may be used again for that purpose anywhere else in the poem.
- III. Each stanza and the envoy must close with the refrain line, repeated without any alteration of sound; though its punctuation, meaning and spelling may be altered.
- IV. The sense of the refrain must be supreme throughout the ballade, the culminating refrain line being always brought in without strain or effort as the natural close of the stanza or envoy.

Formerly the length of the refrain governed the length of the stanza. Thus an eight-syllabled refrain dictated an eight-line stanza, and a ten-syllabled refrain a ten-line stanza. This rule is followed no longer.

- V. The stanza should carry an unbroken sense throughout, and not be split in meaning into two quatrains, or any other division. The needful pauses for punctuation are allowed, but the sense is not to be finished midway of the stanza.
- VI. The envoy, as used in ballades and the chant royal, was at first addressed to the patron of the poet. It is thus usual to commence it with some such invocation as Prince! Princess! Sire! or by some mythical or symbolic persons so introduced. This is at times omitted. The envoy is both a dedication and a culmination, and should be richer in wording and meaning and more stately in imagery than the preceding lines.

Here is a well-wrought ballade, in four-foot iambic verse. The rhyme scheme is indicated by the numerals 1, 2, and 3, the refrain line being designated 3R. To the right appear the checking columns for the three rhyming sounds, to make sure that there are no repetitions—unforgiveable, in strict formal verse of this type.

Ballade of Dead Actors, William Ernest Henley.

As to the two requirements about rhyming, a ballade requires six 1 rhymes. Here the six consonantal sounds, as the checking column establishes, are s, tr, fr, k, pl, and m.

A ballade requires fourteen 2 rhymes. Here the fourteen consonantal sounds, as the checking column establishes, are fl, n, w, the unconsounded vowel, f, fr, sh, gl, b, sn, l, r, thr, and bl.

A ballade requires five 3 rhymes, one of which reappears three times as the refrain. The five sounds used here are g, the unconsounded vowel, v, k, and thr. The rhyming is correct throughout.

The refrain line is used without any alteration of any kind throughout, satisfying the third requirement. It is used throughout as a natural climax of each stanza. Each stanza has its own climactic rise to the refrain. The envoy meets the requirements wholly.

This ballade then may be used as a model.

The meter of a ballade need not be four-foot iambic, as in this example. Andrew Lang's Ballade of Primitive Man has a three-foot anapestic movement with the refrain, " 'Twas the manner of Primitive Man." Dactyls may be used or anapests. A recent newspaper ballade had only two trochees to the line, its refrain being "Life is gay." Another had merely one iambic foot to each line, with the refrain "I love." No doubt someone has written a ballade with only one syllable to each line.

The most famous of all ballades is François Villon's ballade Des Dames du Temps Jadis (Ballade of Bygone Ladies). There are many familiar translations of this: Dante Gabriel Rossetti's with the refrain "But where are the snows of yester-year?", John Payne's with "But what is become of last year's snow?", and others. None of these are authentic recreations in living poetry; not even of the refrain Mais où sont les neiges d'antan? (But where are the last year's snows?) In technique, Rossetti has entirely different rhyming sounds in each stanza and another in the envoy. Payne is accurate though he repeats some rhyme sounds, and uses words as unliving as vade (that is, go), marish, whilere, dole; and surely "Virgin debonair" is an unfortunate mistranslation of Villon's stately Vierge souveraine. At least, none of this is as archaic as two words in this line of Rossetti's version:

Examining the Villon original, we find that he uses the terminal sounds -maine seven times, and rhymes it with moyne and other apparent consonances; rhymes lis and Allis; and otherwise is as lax as French rules allow, rather than following the strict and at that time unpromulgated English rules. An acceptable version in English may take advantage of the practices in the original, although it will have to be an authentic poetic recreation.

The second standard form of the ballade consists of stanzas of ten lines, usually of ten syllables each, as in the five-foot iambic pattern; followed by an envoy of five lines. The regular rhyme scheme for each stanza is 1, 2, 1, 2, 2, 3, 3, 4, 3, 4R, 4R being the refrain line. For the envoy, the rhyme scheme is 3, 3, 4, 3, 4R. This is much rarer in English than the foregoing.

The ballade with double refrain uses two refrains, one occurring at the fourth line of every stanza, and one at the eighth; while, in the envoy, the refrains are the second and fourth lines respectively, the envoy being rhymed couplet-wise. The rhyme scheme for each stanza is 1, 2, 1, 2R; 2, 3, 2, 3R, 2R being the first refrain line, and 3R the second. The rhyme scheme for the envoy is 2, 2R, 3, 3R. The best technique selects two antithetical refrains, and develops each stanza upon the refrain used to close it. Here is an excellent example:

When the roads are heavy with mire and rut,	1
In November fogs, in December snows,	2
When the North Wind howls, and the doors are shut,	1
There is place and enough for the pains of prose;—	2R
But whenever a scent from the whitehorn blows,	2
And the jasmine-stars to the casement climb,	3
Then hey!—for the ripple of laughing rhyme!	3R

When the brain gets dry as an empty nut,
When the reason stands on its squarest toes,
When the mind (like a beard) has a "formal cut,"
There is place and enough for the pains of prose;—	2R
But whenever the May-blood stirs and glows,
And the young year draws to the "golden prime,"—
And Sir Romeo sticks in his ears a rose,
Then hey!—for the ripple of laughing rhyme!	3R

In a theme where the thoughts have a pedant strut,
In a changing quarrel of "Ayes" and "Noes,"
In a starched procession of "If" and "But",
There is place and enough for the pains of prose;—	2R
But whenever a soft glance softer glows,
And the light hours dance to the trysting-time,
And the secret is told "that no one knows,"
Then hey!—for the ripple of laughing rhyme!	3R

Envoy

In a work-a-day world,—for its needs and woes,	2
There is place and enough for the pains of prose;	2R
But whenever the May-bells clash and chime, . . .	3

The Ballade of Prose and Rhyme, Austin Dobson.

The position of the two refrains is indicated throughout by 2R and 3R; and the couplet rhyming of the envoy is also indicated.

The double ballade consists of six stanzas of eight or ten lines each, rhymed as in the ballades already given. Thus this may be six stanzas rhymed 1, 2, 1, 2, 2, 3, 2, 3R; or 1, 2, 1, 2, 2, 3, 3, 4, 3, 4R. Usually the envoy is omitted. Henley, who liked the form, always used an envoy. His Double Ballade of the Nothingness of Things goes beyond these schemes, and has eleven lines to each stanza, rhymed 1, 2, 1, 2, 2, 3, 3, 4, 5, 4, 5R; with an envoy rhymed 3, 3, 4, 5, 4, 5R. And he has stranger varieties. Swinburne's Ballade of Swimming has ten lines to the stanza, and seven anapests to each line—a long interval between rhymes.

The chant royal is the longest and most dignified offspring of the ballade. It has five stanzas of eleven lines each, usually rhymed 1, 2, 1, 2, 3, 3, 4, 4, 5, 4, 5R. The envoy has five lines, rhymed 4, 4, 5, 4, 5R. Sixty lines, in all. . . . Seven (5) rhymes, ten each of (1), (2), and (3), and eighteen separate rhymes for (4). . . .

Here is an amusing example:

I would that all men my hard case might know;
 How grievously I suffer for no sin;
 I, Adolphe Culpepper Ferguson, for lo!
 I, of my landlady am locked in,
 For being short on this sad Saturday,
 Nor having shekels of silver wherewith to pay;
 She has turned and is departed with my key;
 Wherefore, not even as other boarders free,
 I sing (as prisoners to their dungeon stones
 When for ten days they expiate a spree):
 Behold the deeds that are done of Mrs. Jones!

One night and one day I have wept my woe;
 Nor wot I when the morrow doth begin,
 If I shall have to write to Briggs & Co.,
 To pray them to advance the requisite tin
 For ransom of their salesman, that he may Go forth as other boarders go away—
 As those I hear now flocking from their tea,

Led by the daughter of my landlady
 Piano-ward. This day, for all my moans,
 Dry bread and water have been servéd me.
 Behold the deeds that are done of Mrs. Jones!

Miss Amabel Jones is musical, and so
 The heart of the young he-boardér doth win,
 Playing "The Maiden's Prayer," adagio—
 That fetcheth him, as fetcheth the banco skin
 The innocent rustic. For my part, I pray:
 That Badarjewska maid may wait for aye
 Ere she sits with a lover, as did we Once sit together, Amabel! Can it be
 That all that arduous wooing not atones
 For Saturday shortness of trade dollars three?
 Behold the deeds that are done of Mrs. Jones!

Yea! she forgets the arm was wont to go Around her waist. She wears a buckle whose pin
 Galleth the crook of the young man's elbow;
 I forget not, for I that youth have been.
 Smith was aforetime the Lothario gay.
 Yet once, I mind me, Smith was forced to stay Close in his room. Not calm, as I, was he:
 But his noise brought no pleasaunce, verily.
 Small ease he gat of playing on the bones,
 Or hammering on the stove-pipe, that I see.
 Behold the deeds that are done of Mrs. Jones!

Thou, for whose fear the figurative crow
 I eat, accursed be thou and all thy kin!
 Thee will I shew up—yea, up will I shew
 Thy too thick buckwheats, and thy tea too thin.
 Ay! here I dare thee, ready for the fray!
 Thou dost not "keep a first-class house," I say!
 It does not with the advertisements agree.
 Thou lodgest a Briton with a puggaree,
 And thou hast harboured Jacobses and Cohns,
 Also a Mulligan. Thus denounce I thee!
 Behold the deeds that are done of Mrs. Jones!

Envoy

Boarders; the worst I have not told to ye:
 She hath stolen my trousers, that I may not flee

Privily by the window. Hence these groans,
There is no fleeing in a robe de nuit.

Behold the deeds that are done of Mrs. Jones!

Behold the Deeds! (Being the Complaint of Adolphe Culpepper Ferguson, Salesman of Fancy Notions, held in durance of his Landlady for a failure to connect on Saturday night), Henry Cuyler Bunner.

The stanza rhyme scheme is 1, 2, 1, 2, 3, 3, 4, 4, 5, 4, 5R, 5R being the refrain; with the envoy 4, 4, 5, 3, 5R. The rhyming throughout is accurate, and the result is a perfect chant royal. The form is intricate, and the method of checking the various rhyme sounds as they are put down should be followed, to be sure that no rhyming sound is repeated. A great deal of reworking is often necessary to perfect such a form as this. In order to make the envoy the culmination of the verses, it is often necessary to shift the strongest and most vigorous rhyming sounds to it and substitute other words in the earlier stanzas.

It is wise, for rhyme 4, which must be repeated eighteen times, and similar others repeated constantly in the fixed forms, to choose a comparatively simple rhyming sound, such as the  $\ddot{E}$  here, to prevent a lack of rhyming words.

Chain Verse

We have already noted that form of chain verse used in terza rima, where the triplets rhyme 1, 2, 1; 2, 3, 2; 3, 4, 3; 4, 5, 4; and so on. Any repetition of a rhyme, word, phrase, line or group of lines, to tie up a section of the poem with the succeeding section, constitutes chain verse. John Byrom lets line four of each quatrain become line one of the next:

My spirit longeth for thee
Within my troubled breast,
Although I be unworthy
Of so divine a Guest.

Of so divine a Guest
Unworthy though I be,
Yet has my heart no rest,
Unless it comes from thee.

Unless it comes from thee,
In vain I look around,
The Desponding Soul's Wish, John Byrom.

and so on. Chain verse can rise to the elaborateness of a chain of sonnets or more, with the final line in each repeated as the opening line of the next, or even the final word or rhyme sound so used.

The Kyrielle

The kyrielle, strictly described, consists of quatrains with eight syllables to the line, each stanza terminating with the same line—a simple use of the refrain. Here is an example from a poem by John Payne:

A little pain, a little pleasure,
A little heaping up of treasure,
Then no more gazing upon the sun.
All things must end that have begun.

Where is the time for hope or doubt?
A puff of the wind, and life is out;
A turn of the wheel, and the rest is won.
All things must end that have begun.

Golden morning and purple night,
Life that fails with the failing light;
Death is the only deathless one.
All things must end that have begun.

Kyrielle, John Payne.

Here the eight-syllabled pattern is intermittently broken. There is of course no sacredness in any pattern. Such a simple form must compensate by climactic development from stanza to stanza, to justify itself in poetry.

The Pantoum

Ernest Fouinet introduced the Malayan pantoum into French versification, and Victor Hugo popularized it in the Orientales. It is written in four-line stanzas; and the second and fourth line of each stanza become the first and third of the succeeding stanza. In the last stanza the second and fourth lines are the third and first of the first stanza; so that the opening and closing lines of the pantoum are identical. The rhyme scheme would then be: 1, 2, 1, 2; 2, 3, 2, 3; 3, 4, 3, 4; . . . n, 1, n, 1.

Brander Matthews gives an example of one in English:

Here we are riding the rail,
 Gliding from out of the station;
 Man though I am, I am pale,
 Certain of heat and vexation.

Gliding from out of the station,
 Out from the city we thrust;
 Certain of heat and vexation,
 Sure to be covered with dust.

Out from the city we thrust:
 Rattling we run o'er the bridges:
 Sure to be covered with dust,
 Stung by a thousand of midges. . . .

En Route, Brander Matthews.

to the final stanza, ending as the verses began:

Ears are on edge at the rattle,
 Man though I am, I am pale,
 Sounds like the noise of a battle,
 Here we are riding the rail.

The Triolet

The triolet was the first of the rondeau family to appear. The first ones known appeared in the Cléomadés of Adenéz-le-Roi, who wrote in the latter part of the thirteenth century. At first, with ten syllables to each line, the triolet dealt with serious subjects. Today the form is usually eight syllables to the line or even six; and the themes have grown appreciably and constantly lighter. It has eight lines, with only two rhymes. The first line is repeated as the fourth line; the first two lines reappear as the seventh and eighth. The rhyme scheme is 1R, 2R, 1, 1R, 1, 2, 1R, 2R, the repeated lines appearing as 1R and 2R.

Suppose you decide to write a brief triolet, opening with the couplet:

Drink deep—the glass
Is full—and near!

You can at once fill out your fourth, seventh and eighth lines from this, making your pattern now appear as:

Drink deep—the glass	1R
Is full—and near!	2R
	1
Drink deep! The glass	1R
	1
	2
Drink deep—the glass	1R
Is full—and near!	2R

Only three lines, then, remain to be filled in. Once this is done, you have the triolet complete:

Drink deep—the glass
Is full—and near!
Come, lad and lass,
Drink deep! The glass
Too soon will pass
And disappear.
Drink deep—the glass
Is full—and near!

At times a more serious mood rules the use of the form. Thus H. C. Bunner wrote:

A pitcher of mignonette
In a tenement's highest casement;
Queer sort of a flower-pot—yet
That pitcher of mignonette
Is a garden of heaven set
To the little sick child in the basement,
The pitcher of mignonette

In the tenement's highest casement.

Triolet, Henry Cyler Bunner.

Here we have no progress in thought in the use of the reiterated refrain or repetend. Worse than that, the refrain line alters from A pitcher to That pitcher and The pitcher, a vital fault in the use of refrains in the French forms.

A transition to the rondeau form is furnished by this eight-line verse by Leigh Hunt:

Jenny kissed me when we met,
 Running to the chair I sat in.
 Time, you thief, who love to get Sweets upon your list, put that in!
 Say I'm weary, say I'm sad,
 Say that health and wealth have missed me;
 Say I'm growing old, but add—
                                   Jenny kissed me.
                                   Jenny Kissed Me, Leigh Hunt.

The opening half of line one, reappearing as the refrain in line eight, prophesies the rondeau and similar forms. This brilliant little pattern has never become accepted and named.

The Rondel, Rondeau and Roundel Family

The triolet is the seed of the rondeau family. The rondel (the word is an old form of the later word rondeau) arose in all probability in Provence and appeared later in the fourteenth century writings of north France, in the verse of Froissart, Deschamps and others. It began as a lyric of two stanzas, each stanza having four or five lines only, and rhyming triolet-wise upon two sounds . . . either a triolet or a ten-line variant of the triolet.

With Charles d'Orleans, the rondel took the distinct form now assigned to it, of fourteen lines on two rhymes. The first two lines reappear as the seventh and eighth, and as the final couplet—a mere variation of the triolet. This double repetition of the two-lined refrain made the form unwieldy. Later French poets shortened the form to thirteen lines, omitting the second line of the original refrain at the end.

The form as Charles d'Orleans used it appears in this rondel:

Paper, inviolate, white,	1R
Shall it be joy or pain?		2R
Shall I of fate complain,		2
Or shall I laugh tonight?	1
Shall it be hopes that are bright?	1
Shall it be hopes that are vain?		2
Paper, inviolate, white	1R
Shall it be joy or pain?		2R
A dear little hand so light,	1
A moment in mine hath lain;		2
Kind was its pressure again—		2
Ah, but it was so slight!	1
Paper, inviolate, white,	1R
Shall it be joy or pain?		2R

To a Blank Sheet of Paper, Cosmo Monkhouse.

The following rondel, by Samuel Minturn Peck, is in the preferred modern pattern:

Before the dawn begins to glow,	1R
A ghostly company I keep;		2R
Across the silent room they creep,		2
The buried forms of friend and foe.	1
Amid the throng that come and go,	1
There are two eyes that make me weep;		2
Before the dawn begins to glow,	1R
A ghostly company I keep.		2R
Two dear dead eyes. I love them so!	1
They shine like starlight on the deep,		2
And often when I am asleep		2
They stoop and kiss me, being low,	1
Before the dawn begins to glow.	1R

Before the Dawn, Samuel Minturn Peck.

The rondeau is, next to the ballade, the French form most popular in English. It is written, like the triolet and rondel, on two rhymes throughout: thirteen full-length lines and two briefer unrhymed refrains. The refrain may consist of the first half of the first line, but may consist merely of the first word. The fifteen lines are grouped in three stanzas, the first of five lines, the second of three lines and refrain, the third of five lines and refrain. The rhyme scheme then is: 1, 1, 2, 2, 1; 1, 1, 2, R; 1, 1, 2, 2, 1, R. Here is a rondeau that is a poem as well:

A man must live. We justify	1
Low shift and trick to treason high,	1
A little vote for a little gold	2
To a whole senate bought and sold	2
By that self-evident reply.	1
But is it so? Pray tell me why	1
Life at such cost you have to buy?	1
In what religion were you told	2
A man must live?	R
There are times when a man must die.	1
Imagine, for a battle-cry,	1
From soldiers, with a sword to hold,—	2
From soldiers, with the flag unrolled,	2
This coward's whine, this liar's lie,—	1
A Man Must Live , Charlotte Perkins Gilman.

The roundel, based upon occasional early French variants, is today associated with the name of Swinburne, because of his volume A Century of Roundels. As used by Swinburne, the roundel was eleven lines long, two of which were the brief refrain lines. The refrain either consisted of the opening word of line one, or of a portion or a half of that line. If it consisted of more than one word, it usually rhymed with the (2) sound rhyme. The rhyming pattern then would be 1, 2, 1, R; 2, 1, 2; 1, 2, 1, R; or 1, 2, 1, 2R; 2, 1, 2; 1, 2, 1, 2R. Here is an example:

A Roundel is wrought as a ring or a starbright sphere,
 With craft of delight and with cunning of sound unsought,
 That the heart of the hearer may smile if to pleasure his ear
 A roundel is wrought.

Its jewel of music is carven of all or of aught—
 Love, laughter, or mourning—remembrance of rapture or fear—
 That fancy may fashion to hang in the ear of thought.

As a bird's quick song runs round, and the hearts in us hear—

Pause answers to pause, and again the same strain caught,
So moves the device whence, round as a pearl or tear,
A roundel is wrought,

The Roundel, Algernon Charles Swinburne.

The rondelet is a seven-line fixed form, normally of four eight-syllabled lines, and three, the refrain lines, with four syllables each. The rhyme and rhythm scheme is: 1R, 2, 1R, 1, 2, 2, 1R—1R standing for the refrain line, and 1 for the line rhyming with it. Here is an example by May Probyn:

“Which way he went?”	1R
I know not—how should I go spy	2
Which way he went?	1R
I only know him gone. “Relent?”	1
He never will—unless I die!	2
And then, what will it signify	2
Which way he went?	1R

Rondelet, May Probyn.

The rondeau redoublé, a remote relative of the rondeau, is in reality a formalized theme-with-variations treatment. It starts with a quatrain as a theme. This is followed by four additional quatrains, in each of which successively lines one, two, three, and four of the theme quatrain appear as the terminal lines. A concluding stanza has four lines of regular length and a refrain (the first half of line one of the theme) to terminate.

An example will make this clearer:

My soul is sick of nightingale and rose,	1-a
The perfume and the darkness of the grove;	2-b
I weary of the fevers and the throes,	1-c
And all the enervating dreams of love.	2-d
At morn I love to hear the lark, and rove	2
The meadows, where the simple daisy shows	1
Her guiltless bosom to the skies above—	2
My soul is sick of nightingale and rose.	1-a

The afternoon is sweet, and sweet repose,	1
But let me lie where breeze-blown branches move.		2
I hate the stillness where the sunbeams doze,	1
The perfume and the darkness of the grove.		2-b
I love to hear at eve the gentle dove		2
Contented coo the day's delightful close.	1
She sings of love and all the calm thereof,—		2
I weary of the fevers and the throes.	1-c
I love the night, who like a mother throws	1
Her arms round hearts that throbbed and limbs that strove,		2
As kind as Death, that puts an end to woes	1
And all the enervating dreams of love.		2-d
Because my soul is sick of fancies wove		2
Of fervid ecstasies and crimson glows;	1
Because the taste of cinnamon and clove		2
Palls on my palate—let no man suppose	1
My soul is sick.		R

Rondeau Redoublé, Cosmo Monkhouse.

As far as strict rhyming goes, repose—suppose and throes—throws are identities, and not rhymes.

The glose, which is superficially a freer variant of the foregoing pattern, derives apparently from a different source, and is found more often in Spanish and Portuguese verse than in French. It begins, like the rondeau redoublé, with a quatrain, here called the texte, which may be a quotation. This texte the glose proceeds to develop, in four stanzas of ten lines each, closing each stanza, as in the rondeau redoublé, with the successive four lines of the texte. The concluding stanza and refrain of the preceding form are omitted here. In the rhyme scheme, lines six, nine and the tenth or texte line in each stanza rhyme; the rest of the rhyme scheme differs with different users of the form.

Gleeson White, author of a definitive book on the French forms, was unable to discover at the time he wrote any example of the form in English. There are not many examples available. The texte in the following is from Graham R. Tomson's Ballade of Asphodel.

“Queen Prosperine, at whose white feet	1-a
In life my love I may not tell,		2-b
Wilt give me welcome when we meet	1-c

Along the mead of Asphodel?		2-d
Your Majesty, permit me to	3
Indite, as one would say, this bit		4
Of verse respectfully to you;	3
Of course admitting entre nous	3
You may not really fancy it;		4
Although it will be rather neat.	1
And yet the dedication's fit;		4
I want assistance from your wit:		4
I should permit my heart to beat,	1
Queen Proserpine, at whose white feet?		1-a
Remember, Proserpine, I know	5
That quite discriminatingly		6
You made your mind up long ago;	5
You did not like your Stygian beau;	5
He smacked a bit of devilry,—		6
And you were not designed for hell,		2
This shows you're quite a clever she;		6
Ergo, you ought to counsel me.		6
I must make up my mind, or,—well,		2
In life my love I may not tell.		2
Should I ask Venus, she would vote
(That surely is a goddess' right)
For some dame with "a quivering throat
And bosom of desire"—I quote
From memory the line tonight.
Minerva would choose some discreet
Young woman, staid and erudite;
But only she could give delight
Who would, though life's young roses sweet
Wilt, give me welcome when we meet.		1-c
Come, choose her for me! Let her be Stately or dumpy, brown or fair,
If only she'll agree that we Should learn to dwell in harmony,
Giving a gay good-bye to care,—
A beatific way to dwell!
Come, Queen, be gracious to my prayer!
But, no! Such maidens here are rare;

You'd scarce find such a demoiselle
 Along the mead of Asphodel! 2-d

The Quest, Clement Wood.

Naturally, the rhyming scheme of the texte (which is 1, 2, 1, 2 here), dictates the rhyming of the sixth, ninth and tenth lines of each main stanza. In other examples, the quatrain that forms the texte may have any quatrain rhyming, and so a similar extent dictates similar rhymes in each stanza. It is permissible to use the same rhymes in each stanza, except where the rhyme sound of the texte line ordains differently. In other words the four stanzas might be:

1-a, 2-b, 1-c, 2-d
 3, 4, 3, 3, 4, 1, 3, 3, 1, 1-a
 3, 4, 3, 3, 4, 2, 3, 3, 2, 2-b
 3, 4, 3, 3, 4, 1, 3, 3, 1, 1-c
 3, 4, 3, 3, 4, 2, 3, 3, 2, 2-d

This is not required by the strict rules.

The Sestina

Arnaut Daniel, a Provençal troubadour, invented the sestina at the end of the thirteenth century. In France it has been slightly popular. Dante and Petrarch liked to use it. Here are the rules, as drawn up by Daniel and his followers in Italy, Spain and Portugal:

1. The sestina has six stanzas—each of six lines, of the same length—and a concluding three-line stanza.
2. The lines of the six stanzas end with the same six words, not rhyming with each other; these end words are chosen exclusively from two-syllabled nouns.
3. The arrangement of these six terminal words follows a regular law, very complex in ancient times, and altered toward simplicity later, as appears hereafter.
4. The closing three-line stanza uses the six terminal words, three at the centers of the lines, three at their ends.

Modern usage permits the variation of allowing the terminating words to rhyme, either on two rhyming sounds, as Swinburne uses it, or on three. In every case, the six terminal words must be repeated, with no change in sound or spelling, through each succeeding stanza. The order for the six terminal words in the six successive stanzas is as follows:

1st	stanza	1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6
2nd	stanza	6, 1, 5, 2, 4, 3
3rd	stanza	3, 6, 4, 1, 2, 5
4th	stanza	5, 3, 2, 6, 1, 4
5th	stanza	4, 5, 1, 3, 6, 2
6th	stanza	2, 4, 6, 5, 3, 1

The concluding half stanza ends with 2, 4 and 6; and uses 1, 3 and 5 at the beginning—not necessarily as the first word—of the lines; or at the half line, in rhymes that permit their introduction there.

Here is an example: The numerals refer to terminal words, not rhyme sounds.

We are the smiling comfortable homes, 1
 With happy families enthroned therein, 2
 Where baby souls are brought to meet the world, 3
 Where women end their duties and desires, 4
 For which men labor as the goal of life, 5
 That people worship now instead of God. 6

Do we not teach the child to worship God?— 6
 Whose soul's young range is bounded by the homes 1
 Of those he loves, and where he learns that life 5
 Is all constrained to serve the wants therein, 2
 Domestic needs and personal desires,— 4
 These are the early limits of his world. 3

And are we not the woman's perfect world, 3
 Prescribed by nature and ordained of God, 6
 Beyond which she can have no right desires, 4
 No need for service other than in homes? 1
 For doth she not bring up her young therein? 2
 And is not rearing young the end of life? 5

And man? What other need hath he in life 5
 Than to go forth and labor in the world, 3
 And struggle sore with other men therein? 2

Not to serve other men, nor yet his God,	6
But to maintain these comfortable homes,—	1
The end of all a normal man's desires.	4
Shall not the soul's most measureless desires	4
Learn that the very flower and fruit of life	5
Lies all attained in comfortable homes,	1
With which life's purpose is to dot the world	3
And consummate the utmost will of God,	6
By sitting down to eat and drink therein.	2
Yea, in the processes that work therein—	2
Fulfilment of our natural desires—	4
Surely man finds the proof that mighty God	6
For to maintain and reproduce his life	5
Created him and set him in the world;	3
And this high is best attained in homes.	1
Are we not homes? And is not all therein?	1, 2
Wring dry the world to meet our wide desires!	3, 4
We crown all life! We are the aim of God!	5, 6

Homes, Charlotte Perkins Gilman.

Here the lines end on accented syllables, and by no means on two-syllabled nouns exclusively. There is no sestina in any of the collections in English which follows this convention; it may be dismissed, with the reflection that the French, Spanish and Italian languages have more double rhymes than English.

The movements of each terminal word follow a definite pattern, as a graph of the numbered terminal words will show. The order of position is successively 1, 2, 4, 5, 3, 6, 1, 2, 4, 5, 3, etc. By this means the last word of one stanza terminates the first line of the next; and meanwhile the last line of next has been shifted from third position to last, to terminate line one of the ensuing stanza.

Swinburne uses, as terminal words in one of his rhymed sestinas, day, night, way, light, may, delight, as 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6; and thereafter achieves alternate rhymes throughout, by creating his own sequence pattern, as follows: 6, 1, 4, 3, 2, 5; 5, 6, 1, 4, 3, 2; 2, 5, 6, 1, 4, 3; 3, 2, 1, 6, 5, 4; 4, 3, 2, 5, 6, 1, with the terminals of the concluding triplet light, way, delight (4, 3, 6), and the internal rhymes here day, night, may (1, 2, 5). He has worked out even more intricately his rhymed double sestina, The Complaint of Lisa—twelve stanzas of twelve lines each, with a concluding sestet, of 150 lines in all. Charles W. Coleman, in his sestina Love's Going, used three rhyme sounds, sing, rose, heart, thing, goes, apart; but he retains the unrhymed sequence formula, and thus has rhyming couplets in four of his stanzas. Swinburne's variation is to be preferred to this.

Clearly, in writing the sestina, after the first stanza has been completed, the next task is to write down the terminals for all the lines of the next five stanzas, and the terminals and center words of the brief concluding stanza. Then proceed to write. . . . The form is more suitable to clever light verse than to poetry.

The Villanelle

The villanelle lends itself to seriousness, as well as to frivolity. It consists of nineteen lines: five three-lined stanzas, concluding with a quatrain. The refrain couplet, which terminates the form, consists of lines one and three of the first triplet. Moreover, line one (the first half of the refrain) terminates stanzas two and four and line three (the other half of the refrain), stanzas three and five. Only two rhyming sounds are used. The following villanelle follows the pattern strictly:

O Singer of Persephone!	1-a
In the dim meadows desolate,	2
Dost thou remember Sicily?	1-b
Still through the ivy flits the bee	1
Where Amaryllis lies in state,	2
O Singer of Persephone!	1-a
Simaetha calls on Hecate,	1
And hears the wild dogs at the gate;	2
Dost thou remember Sicily?	1-b
Still by the light and laughing sea	1
Poor Polypheme bemoans his fate,	2
O Singer of Persephone!	1-a
And still in boyish rivalry	1
Young Daphnis challenges his mate:	2
Dost thou remember Sicily?	1-b
Slim Lacon keeps a goat for thee;	1
For thee the jocund shepherds wait,	2

O Singer of Persephone!	1-a
Dost thou remember Sicily?	1-b
Theocritus, Oscar Wilde.

Edwin Arlington Robinson pours poetry into the form, in a villanelle concluding:

There is ruin and decay
 In the House on the Hill:
 They are all gone away,
 There is nothing more to say.

The House on the Hill, Edwin Arlington Robinson.

The Lai and the Virelai

The ancient French lai was composed of couplets of five-syllabled lines, all on the same rhyme, separated by single lines of two syllables each, which rhymed with one another. The number of lines in each stanza was not fixed, nor the number of stanzas in the complete poem. An improvised example would be:

Summer heat today	1
In its torrid way,	1
I see,	2
With its awful ray	1
Sears till it must slay	1
Poor me,	2
Tree and grass and clay.	1
It's the bay—the spray	1
And glee!	2

A curious old tradition connected with the form is that the indentation of the shorter lines is forbidden. This detail was called arbre fourchu, a forked tree, from the fancied resemblance of the poem on paper to a tree with branches projecting. Where lais have more than one stanza, the two rhymes in each stanza have no reference to the rhymes in any other.

The virelai or virelai ancien grew out of this, with a sequence of rhymes throughout. Thus, in a twelve-line stanza, the rhymes would be 1, 1, 2, 1, 2, 1, 1, 2, 1, 1, 2. The next stanza would be 2, 2, 3, 2, 2, 3, 2, 2, 3, 2, 2, 3; and so on, until the last stanza appeared as n, n, 1, n, n, 1, n, n, 1, n, n, 1. Thus each rhyme sound would appear once in the longer lines, and once in the shorter. The form is too simple to need illustration.

The virelai nouveau is written throughout on two rhymes. Its initial rhymed couplet serves as a refrain for the later stanzas; and the two lines close each stanza alternately until the last, when they both appear together, but in inverse order. Here is an example which begins with the couplet as its first stanza.

Good-bye to the Town!—good-bye!	1a
Hurrah for the sea and the sky!	1-b
July, Austin Dobson.

The second stanza is rhymed, 1, 1, 1, 2, 1, 1-a. Its third stanza is 1, 2, 1, 2, 1, 2, 2, 1, 1-b. The succeeding stanzas are as irregular, but each is confined to the two rhymed sounds, and the refrains occur in the prescribed order. And here is the concluding stanza, showing the refrain reversed:

So Phyllis, the fawn-footed, hie	1
For a hansom! Ere close of the day	2
Between us a "world" must lie,—	1
Hurrah! for the sea and the sky!	1-b
Good-bye to the Town! GOOD-BYE!	1-a

The Sicilian octave at times is used as a fixed form. It consists of eight iambic five-foot lines, rhymed 1, 2, 1, 2, 1, 2, 1, 2. No difficulty will be found in writing in this pattern.

The rispetto is an Italian form, with interrhyming lines ranging from six to ten in number, though not usually exceeding eight. Used rarely in English, it is usually divided into two stanzas, rhymed 1, 2, 1, 2; 3, 3, 4, 4.

A brief American fixed form, called the sonnette, was originated by Sherman Ripley and had a vogue for a time. It consisted of seven five-foot iambic lines, rhymed: 1, 2, 2, 1; 3, 2, 3. It differed only slightly from the Canopus stanza, already described, which also used seven five-foot iambic lines, but rhymed them 1, 2, 1, 2, 3, 2, 3. Both avoid the terminal couplet, and hence have an uninterrupted flow for narrative verse.

Another recent form is the Douzet, its origin unknown. It consists of twelve five-foot iambic lines, rhymed as follows: 1, 2, 2, 1; 3, 4, 4, 3; 1, 2, 3, 4. This introduces a novelty in the repetition of rhyme not encountered so far elsewhere: the concluding quatrain's rhyme scheme amounting to a summary of the rhyme sounds gone before.

There is no limit to the patterns that ingenuity in versification can produce. Only the rare few among these achieve enduring popularity.

The Japanese form, the hokku, follows Japanese poetry (tanka or uta) in having alternate verses of 5 and 7 syllables. The hokku or haikai consists of only three lines, 5, 7, and 5 syllables, or 17 in all. An improvised example is:

More fleeting than the Flash of withered windblown leaf,
This thing men call life.

The Japanese tanka ordinarily has 31 syllables, consisting of five lines, with respectively 5, 7, 5, 7, and 7 syllables. An improvised example is:

The rippling sea-swell,
Curling upon the gold sand,
And, curving over,
A bough of cherry blossoms,—
Youth shielding eternal age.

Longer Japanese poems may be constructed in the tanka form, with the invariable alternation of 5 and 7 syllables to the line, and the addition of a terminal 7-syllabled line. The rhythm in Japanese poetry is not regarded. The only convention is the number of syllables to the line.

The Limerick

The limerick is the only fixed form indigenous to the English language. It first appeared in Songs for the Nursery, or, Mother Goose's Melodies for Children, published by Elizabeth Goose, (formerly Verigoose, married to Thomas Fleet, a Boston printer) in 1719. Moreover, in this collection it appeared in all three of its successive forms. The first stage opened and closed the five-line form with a nonsense line:

Hickory, dickory, dock!
The mouse ran up the clock.
The clock struck one—
The mouse ran down,
Hickory, dickory, dock!
Nursery Rhymes, Mother Goose.

The second form, the one used by Edward Lear throughout, ended the first and fifth line with a geographical name, at times these lines being identical:

As I was going to Bonner,
Upon my word of honor,
I met a pig
Without a wig,
As I was going to Bonner.
Nursery Rhymes, Mother Goose.

The third and culminating form has a new rhyme sound in the fifth line—as in this example:

There was an old soldier of Bister
Went walking one day with his sister,
When a cow at one poke
Tossed her into an oak,
Before the old gentleman missed her.
Nursery Rhymes, Mother Goose.

A classic model to follow is the famous limerick—

There was a young lady from Niger,
Who smiled as she rode on a tiger.
They came back from the ride
With the lady inside,
And the smile on the face of the tiger.
More Limericks, Cosmo Monkhouse.

The identity instead of rhyme in lines 2 and 5 cannot spoil the charm of this, although the pure pattern would avoid it. This would be—remembering that an extra unaccented syllable can be added either to the 1, 2, 5 rhyme group, or to the 3, 4 group, or to both:

a TUM—ta ta TUM—ta ta TUM ta TUM—ta ta TUM—ta ta TUM, ta ta TUM—ta ta TUM
 ta ta TUM—ta ta TUM
 ta ta TUM—ta ta TUM—ta ta TUM.

In other words, an anapestic pattern, 5, 5, 3, 3, 5 feet to the lines respectively, rhymed 1, 1, 2, 2, 1, usually with an iamb opening lines 1 and 2. Any trick rhyming device is permissible, as:

An amorous M. A.
 Says that Cupid, that C. D.,
 Doesn't cast for his health,
 But is rolling in wealth—
 He's the John Jaco-B. H.

Anonymous.

This must be read by pronouncing M. A. as "master of arts," and by rhyming lines two and five properly to it—"caster of darts" and "Jacob Astor of hearts." Here is one of the tongue-twister variety:

A tutor who tooted the flute
 Tried to teach two young tooters to toot.
 Said the two to the tutor,
 "Is it harder to toot, or
 To tutor two tooters to toot?"

Four Limericks, Carolyn Wells.

Among other possible variations is:

There was a young lady of Diss,
 Who said, "Now I think skating bliss!"
 This no more will she state,
 For a wheel off her skate
 Made her finish up something like this!

Anonymous.

The writing of limericks at times becomes extremely popular.

Little Willies

Any form may become, almost overnight, a favorite with poets and especially light verse writers. Some college student wrote and published in his college paper a rhyme proceeding approximately like this:

Tobacco is a filthy weed.
                   I like it.
 It satisfies no normal need.
                   I like it.
 It makes you thin, it makes you lean,
 It takes the hair right off your bean;
 It's the worst darned stuff I've ever seen.
                   I like it.

Anonymous.

At once this form was copied by newspaper and other light versifiers the breadth and length of the land, and is still intermittently alive.

Another form assumed wide popularity, arising from one of Col. D. Streamer's (Harry Graham's) Ruthless Rhymes for Heartless Homes:

Billy, in one of his nice new sashes,
 Fell in the fire and was burned to ashes.
 Now, although the room grows chilly,
 I haven't the heart to poke poor Billy.
                   Tender-Heartedness, Harry Graham.

The quatrain here consists of two couplets, rhymed 1, 1, 2, 2. The meter combines trochees and dactyls; it might be iambs and anapests, of course, or any of the four. Somehow Billy became rechristened Willie, and at least one anonymous volume has appeared since, dealing in this or other simple quatrains with the adventures of Willie and his family. Among famous ones are:

Willie and two other brats
 Licked up all the Rough-on Rats.
 Father said, when mother cried,
 "Never mind, they'll die outside."
                   Anonymous.

Father heard his children scream,
 So he threw them in the stream,
 Saying, as he drowned the third,
 "Children should be seen, not heard!"
The Stern Parent, Harry Graham.

Late last night I slew my wife
 Stretched her on the parquet flooring.
 I was loath to take her life,
 But I had to stop her snoring.
Necessity, Harry Graham.

Willie poisoned father's tea;
 Father died in agony.
 Mother looked extremely vexed:
 "Really, Will," she said, "what next!"
 Anonymous.

The model for a Little Willie, with its trick last line and its sadistic content, can be taken from any of these.

Light Verse in English

Light verse, including its elegant form called vers de société, demands a technical dexterity greater than that of poetry; for the obviousness and cleverness of the rhyme are a charm here, where they usually interfere with the emotional effect of poetry. The student of versification will benefit by studying Tom Hood, for the use of puns in light verse; Mother Goose, for inspired use of rhythm; Edward Lear and Lewis Carroll, for shapely nonsense verse; Charles Stuart Calverly for mastery of every trick of rhyming, and great dexterity in stanza-devising; W. S. Gilbert, for mastery of the whole field. The long finale of his Iolanthe is his peak in rhyming, and almost the peak of light verse in English. Split words are a constant device: as in Carroll's—

Who would not give all else for two p-Ennyworth of beautiful soup?
Soup of the Evening, Lewis Carroll.

or another surprise rhyming sung by Canning:

Sun, moon, and thou vain world, adieu,
 That kings and priests are plotting in;
 Here doomed to starve on water-gru-
 -El, never shall I see the U--Niversity of Gottingen,
 -Niversity of Gottingen!

Song by Rogero, George Canning.

Humorous verse need not be clever. A poem like Ernest Lawrence Thayer's Casey at the Bat is a perpetual favorite because the theme invokes deep laughter, not because it is trickily versified. Dialect verse is in a class by itself. In writing dialect verse, be careful

(1) To use dialect spelling only where required.

(2) Not to overuse it or the reader will not understand it.

Such an improvised quatrain as—

Sum peoples iz peculyer,
 I reitteratez agen,
 They mus' come f'um Atlanta
 An' not from Bummin'ham is full of bad writing. Sum is the correct pronunciation of some, not a dialect pronunciation; the same is true of iz, reitteratez, and agen. The same is probably true of peculyer. And why f'um and from in the same poem? This is as inept as using you and thou (in any form) in the same poem, to refer to the same person. F'um, mus' and an' are accurate dialect speech.

Among other forms of light verse are parody, aping the versifying mannerisms of another; nonsense verse; whimsical verse of many kinds; mosaic or composite verse, each line taken from some other poet; macaronic verse, where two or more languages are hashed together; shaped whimsies, where the typography pictures the theme, as in the Song of the Decanter, on page 102.

Various forms of typographical oddities may be devised, in which certain of the lines (as the terminals of each quatrain) represent the way a person walks, sober, or intoxicated, or the way he falls down.

Acrostics are verses where the opening letters of the lines, or the closing letters, or letters arrived at by some other system, name a person, or convey a special message. Here is an example:

From your bright sparkling Eyes I was undone;
 Rays, you have; more transparent than the Sun,

Amidst its glory in the rising Day
None can you equal in your bright array;
Constant in your calm and unspotted mind,
Equal to all, but will to none Prove kind,
So knowing, seldome one so Young, you'll Find,
Ah! woe's me, that I should Love and conceal
Long have I wished, but never dared reveal,
Even though severely Love's Pains I feel;
Xerxes that great, wasn't free from Cupid's Dart,
And all the great Heroes, felt the smart.

Acrostic, George Washington.

The words conveyed by the acrostic are revealed by reading downward the first or italicized letters of each line.

The actual writing of light verse calls upon the versifier for every resource and device within the technique of versification. The rhymes should be natural and not rhyme-induced, and the entire treatment natural and adapted to please and amuse.

There was an old decanter and its mouth was gaping wide; the rosy wine had ebbed away and left its crystal side;
and the wind went humming—humming up and down: the wind it flew, and through the reed-like hollow neck the wildest notes it blew. I placed it in the window, where the blast was blowing free, and fancied that its pale mouth sang the queerest strains to me. “They tell me—puny conquerors! the Plague has slain his ten, and war his hundred thousand of the very best of men; but I”—’twas thus the Bottle spake—“but I have conquered more than all your famous conquerors, so feared and famed of yore, Then come, ye youths and maidens all, come drink from out my cup, the beverage that dulls the brain, and burns the spirits up; that puts to shame your conquerors that slay their scores below; for this has deluged millions with the lava tide of woe. Tho’ in the path of battle darkest streams of blood may roll, yet while I killed the body, I have damned the very soul. The cholera, the plague, the sword such ruin never wrought, as I in mirth or malice on the innocent have brought. And still I breathe upon them, and they shrink before my breath, while year by year my thousands go my dusty way of death.”

Song of the Decanter, Warfield Creath Richardson.

POETRY AND TECHNIQUE

The Vocabulary of Poetry

THE VOCABULARY USED by a poet in his poetry should be the vocabulary that he uses in his living speech. Prose uses this, or else it becomes stilted and affected. If an orator commences,

O Mississippi, Father of Waters, thou wast engendered in the hills of Minnehaha; thou hast meandered through meadows green and valleys dappled for more miles than man computeth, his hearers feel that there is something strained and unnatural in his words. The same thought occurs, when poetry, especially modern poetry, contain words no longer in the living vocabulary of man, because they have become archaic; or else unknown to the living vocabulary, because they are artificially constructed to meet the exigencies of rhyme or meter: such words as—

Thou, thee, thy, ye, mineself.

Art (verb form), wast, wert, dost, wilt (verb form), hast, hadst, wouldst, shouldst, shalt, and all verb forms ending in -est, -st and the like.

'Tis, 'gainst, 'gin, 'tween, 'neath, e'er, and other contractions not in living speech; as opposed to it's and other contractions used in living speech.

Wroth, bethink, reft, reaving, athwart, welkin, rathe, fardel, burthen, murther, nave, chaps, gins, sooth, Norwayan, proof (for armor), composition (for terms of peace), ronyon, and all other archaic, obsolescent or obsolete words.

Except for "unless," memorize for "make memorable," and other outworn usages of words.

All unnatural and elliptical expressions, improper in living speech, such as as to for "as if to," bethink me for "recall," for to that for "for to that end" and the like.

All inversions and strained expressions improper in living speech, such as the soldier brave, have I seen, I battles fought, and the like. These are common, because they are rhyme-induced.

Poetry that speaks a dead language is dead from its birth; poetry that speaks a warped and distorted language is warped and distorted from its birth. For when real poetry from real poets is encountered, its speech is as direct, forthright and living as:

Our revels now are ended. These our actors,
As I foretold you, were all spirits, and
Are melted into air, into thin air;
And, like the baseless fabric of this vision,
The cloud-capp'd towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all of which it inherit, shall dissolve,
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind. We are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep.

The Tempest, William Shakespeare.

The captious might suggest inherits for inherit; might point out that faded is out of place; that "made of" is preferable to "made on"; we might query the rack. At that, rack is still used in "rack and ruin," a "cloud-rack," "the rack of a storm"; and rack, used here in the sense of a vestige, is intelligible and may be regarded as living. And this poetry was written more than three hundred years ago, by William Shakespeare, who knew too much, even then, to stud his verse with thee's and thou's and their outmoded verb forms, welkin, athwart, amaranthine, and so on.

The test for the phrasing of poetry is: could you have said the same thing, or its equivalent, to your maid or your butcher, and not been regarded as eccentric? If your poetry speaks your own living language, its vocabulary is acceptable. If it is marred with word fossils no longer acceptable in living speech, to that extent it falls below its possible flight.

No word acceptable in acceptable prose is out of place in poetry. Any word may be so ineptly or awkwardly used in poetry that it becomes a blemish. When Shakespeare wrote:

It is a tale
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,
Signifying nothing,
Macbeth, William Shakespeare.

he used idiot magnificently and poetically; when Wordsworth wrote:

Why bustle thus about your door?
What means this bustle, Betty Foy?
Why are you in this mighty fret?
And why on horseback have you set
Him whom you love, your Idiot Boy?
The Idiot Boy, William Wordsworth.

the word idiot is as unpoetic as the rest of the passage. The living speech, the colloquial, can be magical, poetic, as in this sonnet sestet:

It is some lie that under a windswept tree,
Touching your lips, I touched my vanished youth,
And found again a young, new ecstasy.
It is a lie, I say. This—this is Truth!
Now—I shall rest. For youth and you are gone.
Tomorrow I shall put my flannels on.

Sonnet, John V. A. Weaver

Edwin Arlington Robinson will be remembered for lines as colloquially magical as:

The man who had made other men
As ordinary as arithmetic . . .
I'll have to tell you, Brother Bedivere,
That crowns and orders, and high palaces, . . .
Will not go rolling down to hell just yet
Because a pretty woman is a fool.

Merlin, Edwin Arlington Robinson.

He will have to be forgiven for verse as bookish as:

Born with a face
That on a bullfrog would ensure for life
The lucubrations of a celibate . . .

Less to remembering an obscure monition
 Than to confessing an assured renaissance—
Roman Barthalow, Edwin Arlington Robinson.

though both of these are not so much archaic as morbidly pedantic. Frost rarely departs from living speech; he has enriched the language by phrases immortally and colloquially true, including the familiar:

The trial by market everything must come to.

Even slang has its place: did not Shakespeare have Hamlet say this?

So I do still, by these pickers and stealers . . .
Hamlet, William Shakespeare.

Nor is Sandburg more unpoetic, when he writes:

Play it across the table.
 What if we steal this city blind?
 If they want anything let 'em nail it down.
Cahoots, Carl Sandburg.

John Livingston Lowes, in Convention and Revolt in Poetry, phrases words of gold for poets to remember:

The very greatest effects of poetry are often produced without the use of a single word which might not be employed in ordinary speech.

Thomas Gray wrote in one of his letters:

The language of the age is never the language of poetry. . . . Our poetry . . . has a language peculiar to itself.

This attitude explains the common idea permitting dead speech in verse; it cannot resurrect poets following it from the graves their practice of this dug. Such poets live only insofar as they violate this statement.

Wordsworth followed this, when he precluded his The Force of Prayer with the double archaism:

What is good for a bootless bene?

Witty Mary Lamb flashed back, when her brother Charles read this to her, "A shoeless pea," and punned this absurd line into immortality. And there is Rossetti's phrase from his rendition of the Villon ballade,

From Love he won such dule and teen!

Poetry does not gain by using such mummified speech.

Kipling was more successful than any previous poet so far in using the language of the machine age in poetry:

It is their care, in all the ages, to take the buffet and cushion the shock;
 It is their care that the gear engages; it is their care that the switches lock;
 It is their care that the wheels run truly; it is their care to embark and entrain,
 Tally, transport, and deliver duly the sons of Mary by land and main.

The Sons of Martha, Rudyard Kipling.

In a memorandum dealing with the writing of Leaves of Grass, Walt Whitman wrote:

I had great trouble in leaving out the stock
 "poetical" touches, but succeeded at last.

Even this great plain-speaking master slipped back, as he aged, into stock poeticisms such as:

'mid, unrecked, know I, yield we, ye valleys grand.

But in the main he avoided this blemish. And he has made the task easier for those who followed him.

Sidney Lanier lays stress upon phonetic syzygy, that extension of alliteration which includes all related consonants, as t, d, th, and TH; g, k, ch, and other gutturals; and so on. Other authorities deal extensively with onomatopoeia, the language device in which words reproduce the sounds they are intended to convey, as in—

With lisp of leaves and ripple of rain.

Chorus from Atalanta in Calydon, Algernon Charles Swinburne.

With any inner sense of music, we will avoid lines as awkward, inept and unsingable as Browning's familiar:

Irks care the crop-full bird, frets double the maw-crammed beast?
Rabbi Ben Ezra, Robert Browning.

Let your poetic speech be your own living speech at its best, dictated by an innate sense of music, and the result will satisfy.

On Translating Poetry

Poetry cannot be translated; it can only be recreated in the new language. We are dealing with the ingredients of verse, not of poetry, in this book: a study of the essence of poetry would not deal with iambs and cinquains and sestinas, it would deal with the stimuli that most deeply affect the human emotions. The emotion-arousing quality in words cannot be stated otherwise even in the same language, much less in another one. There is no translation in English for emotion-arousing words such as home, mother, love, and so on; not house or domicile, not mamma or maternal ancestor or Moms or ma, not affection, or devotion or lust or rut. How can night be expressed in another word, or moon or sun, or May, or December? Each of these words—to some extent each word in the language—has a tone color, a history, a personality, an effectiveness of its own. With many of the words in the language, each person has strange and personal associations, naturally untranslatable. There are emotions which are not translatable from country to country, but which can only be recreated by some remote equivalent. When Noyes climaxes a poem with the glorious invocation, Englande!—Englande!—Englande!—Englande!

Marchant Adventurers, Alfred Noyes.

he utters a battle cry that only an Englishman could thrill to. Its word music is lost the moment it reappears as Angleterre! Angleterre! Angleterre! Angleterre! "Finland! Finland! Finland! Finland!" would not thrill similarly, though the rhythm and word tune are the same. A fourfold repetition of Switzerland, or Czechoslovakia, or, queerly enough, even of United States would not evoke a similar thrill. Moreover, Shelley could have used the same repetition of England, in a poem in the bitter mood of The Masque of Anarchy, and it would have evoked utter detestation: so intangible are the elements in sounds that uplift or break the heart, that send a Cardigan or a Pickett with a whole brigade of men to death at the monosyllable "Charge!"—that spell heaven in a girl's whispered "Yes," and a lifetime's dearth in her even briefer "No."

In Keat's Ode to a Nightingale we have two lines of peak magic:

Charmed magic casements, opening on the foam
Of perilous seas, in faery lands forlorn.

These two lines cannot be said differently in English without wrecking the magic. Accurately paraphrased, they would give:

Enchanted supernatural windows, unclosing on the bubbles
Of dangerous oceans, in unreal romantic countries dejected.

There is no poetry here now. Translate it with absolute fidelity into another language, and the poetry is as dead. It must be recreated by a poet of like emotional power in the other language, if it is to survive there as poetry.

Fitzgerald did such magic, when he took a literal translation of the poetic Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám, such as these two groups of lines:

Everywhere that there has been a rose or tulip-bed,
It has come from the redness of the blood of a king;
Every violet shoot that grows from the earth
Is a mole that was once on the cheek of a beauty.
Quatrains, Omar Khayyám.

This is inaccurate botanically and only whimsically effective as an idea. It is certainly not poetry. Nor is:

Hell is a spark from my useless worries,
Paradise is a moment of time when I am tranquil.
Quatrains, Omar Khayyám.

But out of this material Fitzgerald wrought—created, recreated—what thousands hail as poetry:

I sometimes think that never blows so red
 The Rose, as where some buried Caesar bled;
 That every Hyacinth the Garden wears
 Dropt in her Lap from some once lovely Head. . . .

Heav'n but the Vision of fulfilled Desire,
 And Hell the Shadow from a Soul on fire,
 Cast on the Darkness into which Ourselves,
 So late emerged from, shall so soon expire.

Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám, Edward Fitzgerald.

This is no longer Omar Khayyám; it is far more Fitzgerald, inspired by Omar Khayyám. The reflection about the rose is acceptable now; the whimsy about the hyacinth is more pleasing to us than the more fleshly Oriental passion of the mole on the cheek of a beauty. The definitions of heaven and hell no longer resemble the original at all. Oriental impassivity and superiority to things earthly have been replaced by a viewpoint accurate enough to have come out of Freud, and acceptable as concentrated truth to many of us. All of this is expressed with the most effective devices of versification, a language in which poetry must speak, if it speaks at all.

Something like this must be done, each time you seek to make a translation. A literal translation can give the idea, but never the poetry.

For a last example, here is an accurate translation of the first five verses of the first chapter of Genesis by Fagnani:

At the beginning of Elohim's forming the heavens and the earth, when darkness was upon the face of the abyss, Elohim said, "Let there be light," and there was light.

Elohim saw that the light was excellent.

And Elohim separated the light from the darkness and he called the light Day and the darkness he called Night.

Evening came, and Morning came.

The Beginning of History, According to the Jews, Charles Prosper Fagnani.

This is near to poetry, so magnificent is the primitive conception. But it is not mere familiarity that makes us recognize, from the hands of greater poets writing in English, the magnificent poetry of the same verses, as they appear in the King James Bible:

*In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth.
And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters.*

And God said, Let there be light; and there was light.

And God saw the light, that it was good; and God divided the light from the darkness.

*And God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night.
And the evening and the morning were the first day.*

Genesis, King James's Translation.

The most accurate translation of a poem is no more than rude notes for a poem to be built upon. There is always need for accurate renditions of the poetry of other lands and tongues. But, unless the English versifier reissues the product as his own re-creation, it remains mere verse, a museum curiosity rather than impassioned song.

Exercises in Versification

To give the book its greatest value, the reader, having reached this point, should start over again, and write exercises in each poetic device treated. Practice iambic lines, each number of feet to the line, rhymed and unrhymed. The same with trochaic, anapestic, and dactylic lines. At times seek to pour poetry into these molds; at times find the relief of light verse in them.

Essay the stanzas, from the couplet up to such involved arrangements as the Spenserian stanza and terza rima. Work on sonnets of both kinds: aiming at technical mastery, rather than poetic excellence, at first. Get the patterns etched on your mind, and then you can write in them accurately without consciously remembering them. Try the solace of concentrated and poetic free verse. And then, if you care to, go to the fixed forms one after another, preferably in light verse, and among all these attempts you will startle yourself by achieving at times a veritable poem or gem of light verse when you merely intended finger exercises.

And at all times, when the poetic mood comes, write what comes, from a phrase, a line, a couplet, to an epic fragment: and preserve it, on the chance that, sooner or later, the rest of the poem will come.

THE COMPLETE RHYMING DICTIONARY

What Rhyme Is

RHYME IS THE identity in sound of an accented vowel in a word, usually the last one accented, and of all consonantal and vowel sounds following it, with a difference in the sound of the consonant immediately preceding the accented vowel.

Rhyme thus deals exclusively with sound. Sound is indicated in all dictionaries by phonetic markings. In this rhyming dictionary, each group of words that rhyme is preceded by a heading consisting of the accented vowel, marked phonetically, and followed by all the consonantal and vowel sounds following it. The unaccented syllables are not marked phonetically as thoroughly, since they are relatively unimportant: except to distinguish between rhyme sounds like pasture (ÄS'tūr) and faster (ÄS'tūr), and to identify certain long vowels.

The one-syllabled rhymes are given first, with the rhyme-sound headings arranged alphabetically, from the first A sound to the last U sound. Then follow the two-syllabled rhymes, similarly arranged; and, last of all, the three-syllabled rhymes.

The Vowel Sounds

In this phonetic arrangement, the vowel sounds used are indicated as follows. After each is given the various ways in which the sound appears in spelling in English

A

Ä as in ale; heard also in pain, day, break, veil, obey, gaol, gauge, eh.

- Â as in care; heard also in there, pear, air, heir, prayer, e'er.
 Ȃ as in add; heard also in plaid, bade.
 Ȧ as in arm, father; heard also in hearth, sergeant, memoir.
 Ȧ as in ask. Strictly, authorities say that A should be so pronounced (midway between the A in father and the A in add) when followed by s, th, f, or m or n plus a consonant. In practice, this sound is usually pronounced like the A in add. The rule becomes absurd when we try to pronounce pan with the A sound in add, and pans with a different A sound.

E

- Ē as in me; heard also in eve, feet, beam, deceive, people, key, Caesar, machine, field, quay, phoebe.
 Ē̄ as in here; heard also in fear, dreary, weird.
 Ē̄̄ as in end; heard also in heifer, leopard, friends, Aetna, feather, asafotida, bury, any, Thames, said, says.

I

- Ī as in ice; heard also in vie, rye, height, eye, aisle, aye (meaning yes), sky, buy, choir.
 Ī̄ as in ill; heard also in sieve, English, pretty, been, breeches, women, busy, build, nymph, hymnal.

O

- Ō as in old; heard also in note, oh, roam, foe, shoulder, grow, owe, sew, yeoman, beau, hautboy, brooch.
 Ô as in or; heard also in all, talk, swarm, haul, caught, law, fought, broad, memoir.
 Ö as in odd; heard also in want, wash, shone.
 OI as in oil; heard also in boy.
 OO as in foot; heard also in full, wolf, could.
 OU as in out; heard also in cow, sauerkraut.

U

- Ū as in use; heard also in beauty, feud, pew, queue, lieu, view, cue, suit, yule, you, do, rule, true, food, group, drew, fruit, canoe, rheum, maneuver, blue. (The difference in sound between dew and do is that dew is properly dyŪ, with a consonantal y sound preceding the long U. This difference does not affect rhyming, except as it concerns preceding consonants. For the sake of convenience, the yŪ group ordinarily precedes the Ū group.)

Ū as in urn; heard also in fern, err, heard, sir, word, journal, myrrh, colonel.

Ů as in up; heard also in won, one, does, flood, double.

The Consonant Sounds

The consonant sounds used in English, and in most instances spelled phonetically in the headings preceding all groups of words rhyming together, are as follows:

B as in baby.

CH as in chair; heard also in, match, question, righteous.

D as in did; heard also in robbed.

F as in fill; heard also in philosophy, laugh.

G as in go, anger; heard also in guard, plague, ghost.

GZ as the sound represented by x in exist.

H as in hat.

HW as the sound represented by wh in what.

J as in joke; heard also in gem, religion, pigeon, soldier, edge.

K as in keep; heard also in chorus, epoch, cube, pack, conquer, pique.

KS as the sound represented by x in vex.

KW as the sound represented by qu in queen.

L as in late.

M as in man.

N as in no.

N The French nasal sound, not natural in English.

NG as in sing; heard also in tongue, bank, junction, linger, canker.

P as in papa.

R as in red; heard also in rhombus.

S as in so, this; heard also in cell, scene, hiss.

SH as in she; heard also in machine, ocean, social, conscious, sure, nauseous, pension, issue, passion, nation.

T as in time.

TH as in then.

th as in thin.

TU as in nature. This sound is more accurately TY consonantal.

- V as in van.
 W as in want; heard also in persuade, choir.
 Y as in yet; heard also in union.
 Z as in zone; heard also in is, lives, Xenophon.
 ZH as the sound represented by z in azure; heard in glazier, pleasure, vision, abscission, rouge, genre.

A few warnings are important:

C is not a separate sound. Words spelled with c appear under K or S.

Q is not a separate sound. Words spelled with qu or q appear under KW.

X is not a separate sound. Words spelled with x appear under GZ or KS; initial x appears as Z.

NK, in words like rank, is properly NGK and so appears.

To form plurals and other inflections, F, K, P and T are followed by the sound S; the plain vowel, G, D, B, M, N, S, V, J, CH, L, R, KS (X) and Z are followed by the sound Z.

To form past tenses and other inflections, CH, S, F, K, and P are followed by the sound T; the plain vowel, G, D, B, M, N, S, V, J, L, R and Z are followed by the sound D.

Sound Does Not Depend on Spelling

Sound does not depend on spelling. "Eye-rhymes," or words matched as rhymes only because they are spelled alike, need not be rhymes at all. For instance, here are five different sounds spelled alike, ough:

cough, enough, plough, though, through.

It is as logical to rhyme these together as to rhyme earth-hearth, bare-are, north-forth, real-steal.

Again note that timber and climber are spelled alike; but the first rhymes with limber (ĪM'bur) and the second with rhymer (ĪM'ur). Three more words spelled alike but rhymed very differently are ginger (ĪNJ'ur); singer (ĪNG'ur); and finger (ĪNG'ur). Until cow rhymes with blow it is well to avoid all these words spelled alike but pronounced differently.

This Dictionary Makes Consonance Accurate

Consonance consists in the identity of all consonantal and vowel sounds after the accented vowel; and a difference in the accented vowel. This dictionary, classified according to strict phonetic pronunciation, for the first time makes consonance easy and accurate. Alphabetically arranged by the headings preceding each group of rhyme words, the following three rhyme sounds appear together: Ō'lē (wholly), Ō'lē (Raleigh), ŌL'ē (folly). Naturally these three groups are in consonance with each other.

To get the other groups of rhyming words which may be used in consonance with these three, look up successively Ā'lē, ĀL'ē, Ē'lē, Ē'lē, OIL'ē, ŌOL'ē, OUL'ē, ŪL'ē; and you have all the possible sounds in consonance with the three sounds given. You may stretch a point and add ĀR'lē, ĀR'lē, ĒR'lē, and ŪR'lē if you wish, and now nothing conceivable is omitted.

Consonance, always used by the best poets, is growing so increasingly in favor that this use of the present Complete Rhyming Dictionary may become very important.

This volume contains hundreds of rhyming words omitted from other collections: words recently added to the vocabulary, especially in the fields of general science, pure and applied; inventions and popular applications of them; and the vivid field of recent generally acceptable slang words. The effort has been to include all words that are a proper part of the living vocabulary of man, for it is in this language that living poetry must speak.

Archaic and obsolete words, words used in an artificial or solemn style, and words whose pronunciation in poetry may vary from their pronunciation in prose have also been included. They are available to the seeker who wishes to use them, each in its proper niche, usually identified by being in italics.

In addition to this, the present volume contains more proper names than were ever listed in a rhyming dictionary before. This includes especially:

The familiar first names of boys and girls, men and women.

The familiar and easily rhymable geographical names.

The more familiar surnames, family names, or last names.

In listing proper names, the name is often not repeated when it differs only from a common word by the use of a capital. Thus, since wood is included, Wood is not. Where the spelling differs, the rhyming proper name is usually added. Thus to main is added Maine. Moreover, unnecessary duplication of words is generally avoided throughout the book. A large number of words ending in -y is given as rhymes for the long E sound; but at the end of this large list, the reader is referred to other words ending in -y, to be found in such three-syllabled rhyme groups as the words rhyming with ability, which are to be consulted, if the seeker desires more rhymes for long E. Moreover, at the end of the rhyming words listed to rhyme with fade, the reader is referred to the list of words rhyming on the long A sound, to which -ed is to be added, to make further rhymes for fade; and this is to be consulted, if the seeker desires more rhymes for fade. There is as little such cross-reference as possible, and it is never perplexing.

The dictionary is not wholly complete, and probably none will ever be. Rare and unusual scientific and geographic terms and names, for instance, as a rule have been omitted. It will add to the value of your copy of the book if you add, at the appropriate place, all omitted words that you discover.

In the lists of words rhyming on the last syllable and on the syllable before the last, certain words are included which have no rhyming mates. The monosyllables or words accented on the last syllable which appear to be rhymeless are:

aitch, H	bourne	culm
avenge, revenge	bourse	culp
avenged, revenged	bulb	doth
bilge	coif	film
forge	peart	sylph
fugue	porch	torsk
gulf, engulf	pork	twelfth
lounge	poulp	plagued, unplagued
mauve	prestige	warmth
month	puss	wasp
morgue	recumb	wharves
mourned, bemourned,	rouge	wolf
unmourned	sauce	wolves
mouthe	scarce

of, hereof, thereof, whereof	spoilt swoln
---------------------------------	-----------------

In addition to these forty-three rhymeless sounds, there is a group which has no rhyme in the living vocabulary:

amongst	forth, fourth
breadth	ninth depth	sixth eighth	tenth
fifth	width

These can all be rhymed by using permissible contractions of archaic or obsolete forms, such as: clung'st, shed'th, step'th, hate'th, sniff'th, pour'th, pine'th, mix'th, pen'th, and skid'th. There is a limited group of words which find their rhyming mates only in proper names, including:

alb (De Kalb)	hemp (Kemp)	oblige (Lije)
---------------	-------------	---------------

There are other words which have no proper rhyming mates, but have words so close in sound that they are used as rhyming mates by many poets:

blague (vague)	en masse (class)
raj (dodge)	basque (mask, masque)
wand (pond)	else (belts)
melange (blanc mange)	grilse (wilts)
swap (top)	Welsh (belch)

MONOSYLLABLES, AND WORDS ACCENTED ON THE LAST SYLLABLE: MASCULINE RHYMES; SINGLE RHYMES

In compound words—words consisting of two or more words united—the parts of the words may be joined without a hyphen, may be joined with a hyphen, or may be written separately. In some words usage is fixed; in others it varies. No standard rule is followed; though the hyphen today is less used than formerly. In this book, the usual practice of the best prose writers and poets is followed, modified in instances by the editor's own preference. In general, poets and versifiers make such decisions for themselves in each instance.

A

These words include the following accented vowel sounds:

Ā as in ale; heard also in pain, day, break, veil, obey, gaol, gauge, eh.

Â as in care; heard also in there, pear, air, heir, prayer, e'er.

Ă as in add; heard also in plaid, bade.

Ä as in arm, father; heard also in hearth, sergeant, memoir.

Å as in ask. In practice, this is usually pronounced like the A sound in add.

For the vowel sound heard in all, talk, swarm, haul, caught, law, see under Ô.

For the vowel sound heard in want and wash, see under Ö.

U

These words includes the following accented vowel sounds:

Û as in use; heard also in beauty, feud, pew, queue, lieu, view, cue, suit, yule, you, do, rule, true, food, group, drew, fruit, canoe, rheum, maneuver, blue. The difference between dew and do is that dew is properly dyÛ, with a consonantal y sound preceding the long U, while do is merely dÛ.

Û as in urn; heard also in fern, err, heard, sir, word, journal, myrrh, colonel.

Û as in up; heard also in won, one, does, flood, double.

WORDS ACCENTED ON THE THIRD SYLLABLE FROM THE END: ANTEPENULTS; TRIPLE RHYMES

A

For a discussion of words included under the accented vowels following, see the beginning of A rhymes in Section I.

(Note on Archaic Verb Forms Among Triple Rhymes — The archaic verb forms ending in -est and -eth have not as a rule been listed among the triple rhymes, to avoid needlessly expanding the book. When desired, they can be found by locating the present participles of triple-rhymed verbs, the -ing form: such forms as laboring, bracketing, fracturing, dallying, hampering, clamoring, meandering, and the rest. These can be turned without difficulty into the desired archaic forms: as, laborest, laboreth; bracketest, bracketeth; and so with all of them.)
